Be it enacted, etc., That the proper legal representatives of Sarah J. Montgomery, deceased, late of Terrebonne Parish, State of Louisiana, be, and hereby are, authorized to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the net proceeds of 125 bales of cotton alleged to have been taken from Oak Point plantation, Madison Parish, La., by the Army of the United States, about the year 1863; and for this purpose jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine said cause, and in so doing the said court shall consider any and all testimony heretofore taken in the case of William J. Hill against The United States, and in the case of Montgomery's administrator, etc., against The United States, Court of Claims, No. 7159, and such new and further testimony as may be adduced by either party; and if the said court shall find from all the evidence that Sarah J. Montgomery, or her late husband, Johnson Montgomery, was the owner of said cotton, and that it or any part thereof was taken by officers of the United States, and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, then and in that event judgment shall be rendered for the claimant for the net amount realized by the United States from the sale of said cotton.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, if the gentleman does not want to occupy the floor, I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. COOPER of Texas rose.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall proceed, if he wishes to. Otherwise I wish to be recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I very cheerfully accept the opportunity to give the reasons for the passage of this bill. The bill does not undertake directly to take any money out of the Treasury. Its object and purpose is to refer the parties claimant to the Court of Claims, where they may have their claim considered in due course of law. If a judgment should be rendered, then it would be expected that the Congress of the United States would pay it.

Mr. HASKINS. Not unless it is shown that the property taken was turned into the Treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes; the bill expressly provides that it must be shown that these parties were the owners of the property, that the United States Government got this property, and they can not recover a larger sum than the net proceeds of the property.

Now, a brief history may be of some service in this matter. A suit was instituted by a man named Hill, who claimed to own this property, and he recovered a judgment against the Government. He, Hill, claimed that his rights in the property had been acquired through a man by the name, I believe, of Ellis. Subsequently the Montgomery heirs, who owned the plantation, and who claimed to own the cotton, intervened in that suit. The Court of Claims held that their intervention came too late, that they were barred by limitation, that they did not have a cause of action against the Government. As a consequence, they had no standing in court. It was believed, and afterwards developed, that this man Hill had practiced a fraud upon the Government; that he was not, in fact, the owner of the cotton. After the judgment had been obtained, the attorney for the Government discovered this fraud and moved for a new trial, summoning Hill and using the process of the court to get him before the court, time and again undertaking to get the matter tested. Hill declined to appear before the court, or was not discovered. The question then was, Where was the title to this property? The judgment of the court could not be longer maintained, because a fraud had been practiced upon the court as to the ownership of this property. Then a suit was instituted in Louisiana between the claimants of this property, which suit was appealed to the supreme court of Louisiana. That court held that the Montgomery heirs were the proper owners of this property. That is briefly the case, and I prefer to answer any questions rather than go into an extended discussion. I want the House to understand that we are not asking for a direct appropriation. We are only asking for an opportunity to go to the courts, and let the courts determine whether this property belongs to Mrs. Montgomery, and whether or not the Government of the United States is indebted to the heirs of the Montgomery estate. That is all the statement I have to make, unless some gentleman desires to make an inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a bill to pay money directly. It is a bill to refer to the Court of Claims a case where undoubtedly—I assume that the facts are correctly stated—there is a liability on the part of the Government. The only question we are interested in is as to whether, in the reference to the Court of Claims, advantage is taken of any person who is not represented here. In the case, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] has stated, is involved the value of a considerable amount of cotton. It is admitted that this cotton was raised on the Oak Point plantation, in Madison Parish, La. A suit was commenced by Mr. Hill against Mr. Ellis, and that suit was prosecuted to a final judgment. In that judgment the right to the fund in the Treasury and the title to the property were declared to be in one or the other of those men, I do not remember which. Subsequently, upon the application of the Attorney-General of the United States, who alleged fraud, the proceedings were set aside. Meanwhile Thomas Montgomery, administrator of the estate of Johnson Montgomery, who had died in 1864 in Texas, filed a petition in the case, alleging fraud and collusion on the part of Hill and Ellis, but the court held that the statute of limitations had run against that petition.

After the judgment was set aside nothing further was done. The Attorney-General had citations or orders issued that Mr. Hill should appear and testify. He did not appear. The case now stands in that shape. But the gentleman's bill is not confined to ascertaining whether Mrs. Montgomery was the owner of the property. The bill provides that the proper legal representatives of Sarah J. Montgomery, deceased, may bring suit in the Court of Claims—and if the said court shall find from all the evidence that Sarah J. Montgomery, or her late husband, Johnson Montgomery, was the owner of said cotton, and that it or any part thereof was taken by the officers of the United States and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, then and in that event judgment shall be rendered for the claimant for the said amount realized by the United States from the sale of said cotton.

Now, there is a controversy between the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery and Mr. Montgomery as to the title of the tract.

Why should Congress undertake to say that the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery shall have the property without giving the heirs of Mr. Montgomery a chance to be heard?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. For two reasons: One is that the supreme court of Louisiana has passed upon the question and declared that the property was hers, and this does not prevent any other claimants from intervening and establishing their right in the property, if they have any.

Mr. MANN. Here is a controversy over a piece of property. The Government has the proceeds of the property. There were four claimants for it. Two of them have practically become eliminated and the rest are dead. The heirs of Mr. Montgomery claim to own the property, and the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery claim that she owned the property, and we proceed to direct the Court of Claims to enter a judgment in favor of the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery, no matter who owned the property. It absolutely shuts out the heirs of Mr. Montgomery. I do not know whether he had title to the property or not. They brought suit and had litigation. Subsequently the heirs of Johnson Montgomery claimed to own title to the plantation. That suit went to trial and the court held that he did not have title to the land, but it does not appear that he did not own the cotton which was raised on the land. It does not necessarily follow at all that the title to the cotton was the same as the title to the land.

Now, it seems to me that the bill ought to be limited in such a way that Mrs. Montgomery's legal heirs can only obtain judgment in case they prove title. If we pass the bill as it is now and allow this claim, and it subsequently appears that Mr. Johnson Montgomery's heirs shall appear and say, "You admitted that you ought to pay the claim, and now it belongs to us," we would have to permit them to go into court and ascertain whether they had the title to the property, and if they did, we would have to pay it twice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that when a plaintiff goes into court he has to first show his title and that the court will give him no more than he shows title to? The burden is upon him. If he only shows title to one-half or three-quarters, he will only get judgment for that.

Mr. MANN. That is undoubtedly the case, but this bill changes that rule.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By what language?

Mr. MANN (reading):

And if the court shall find from all the evidence that Sarah J. Montgomery or her late husband, Johnson Montgomery, was the owner of said cotton, and that it or any part thereof was taken by officers of the United States and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, then and in that event judgment shall be rendered for the claimant for the net amount realized by the United States for the sale of said cotton.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If they were the owners of it then they would be entitled to the judgment; that is all the court would give them.

Mr. MANN. But this bill gives judgment to the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery, although it might find she was not the owner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The legal representatives could not recover any more than the original party.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I agree; but here is a bill that proposes to give them something else—to give them more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not so read it; I do not think that is the construction.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how you can construe the English language any differently. You might as well authorize John Smith to bring suit; and if it should appear that John Smith or Jim Brown was the owner of the property, judgment should be given in favor of John Smith.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the amount of property that John Smith proves he owns.

Mr. MANN. Not at all—for the net amount realized by the United States from the sale of said cotton.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That belonged to John Smith.

Mr. MANN. Not at all; that belonged to John Smith or Jim Jones, either one. There is no limitation about it. The gentleman can not defend that, and the matter has been once in litigation and is likely to go there again. After the death of Mrs. Montgomery litigation ensued between the collateral heirs of Johnson Montgomery, the husband, and the heirs of his late wife, Sarah Montgomery, each claiming to own Oak Point plantation, the title to which had been in the name of Mrs. Sarah Montgomery, and which she claimed to own and manage as her separate paraphernal property. After years of litigation the supreme court of Louisiana decided in favor of the heirs of Mrs. Montgomery, and that as such they were entitled to the Oak Point plantation. But the title to this property, which was entirely separate from the plantation itself, was not determined in that case. There is an actual controversy between the heirs of the husband and of the wife as to who owned the property, and yet we propose to pay the heirs of one, and then if it shall appear that the heirs of the other in a subsequent proceeding really represent the owners, I suppose we will pay them over again. Does not the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] think that we ought to confine the payment to the claimant who is permitted to sue?

Mr. HASKINS. The gentleman assumes that the owner of the real estate is the owner of the crops grown thereon.

Mr. MANN. That is not a necessity at all. I may have land and have a tenant on the land. Does the gentleman assume that the crops belong to the owner of the land?

Mr. HASKINS. There is nothing of that kind appearing in this case.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing which appears to the contrary in the case, and, on the contrary, the first application that was filed in the case years ago was a claim that the husband owned the title to this property. Now, I do not know who owned it, and I am sure that the gentleman from Vermont does not know who owned it. Why should we foreclose the right of these people to have a proper hearing in the case? I am perfectly willing to have them file a claim in this court and give this money now in the possession of the United States to whomever shall establish title to the property. But let us give every claimant a chance in the case, and not put ourselves in the position where we admit our liability and pay one person and then are not in a position to refuse to pay the other if the title appears that way. Why can not we have it so that the legal representatives of Mrs. Montgomery or of Mr. Montgomery may file claim in the court? Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this case, it is admitted that the United States Government has the money in the Treasury, and the only question is as to whom it belongs. If there is any infirmity in the bill in that respect, if the gentleman will point it out I presume it will be amended. Otherwise the bill certainly ought to be passed. It merely provides that the Court of Claims may ascertain whether these heirs are entitled to this money, which appears on the books of the United States as having been received from this cotton and belongs to some one—not to the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman and I quite agree about the bill. I wonder if we could agree further. The gentleman understands that, according to the report, there was a dispute, and probably still is a dispute as to the ownership of this cotton as between Mr. Montgomery, the husband, and Mrs. Montgomery, his wife, or between their heirs. There has already been litigation in reference to the title to the land upon which this cotton was raised. Now, this bill proposes to foreclose that dispute without a hearing.

Mr. WALDO. Let me say in answer that I do not understand any such thing. If this woman's heirs can not prove title to this money, they do not get it. That is the way I understand the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is the very reason I call the attention of the gentleman to it.

Mr. WALDO. I do not understand that the bill so reads.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that if the legal representatives of Mrs. Montgomery file a claim in the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims find that Mrs. Montgomery or Mr. Montgomery own the property, then they shall find a judgment in favor of the representatives of Mrs. Montgomery for the whole amount in the Treasury, regardless of whether Mrs. Montgomery owned the property or Mr. Montgomery owned the property, when the record itself shows that there is a dispute as to which one owned the property.

Mr. WALDO. If there is any question about there being two sets of heirs, let us have an amendment to cover that. I have no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. The report itself shows that there has been long litigation over the question.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the floor I will attempt to satisfy the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I yield the floor and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "or her late husband, Johnson Montgomery."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES S. BLOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13809), for the relief of Charles S. Blood.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Charles S. Blood, late a second lieutenant of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, the sum of $1,654.50, for services as such officer from the 2d day of July, 1863, to October 11, 1864.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "of," strike out "$1,654.50" and insert "563.65."

In line 10 strike out the words "October 11" and insert the words "January 31."

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, Lieutenant Blood was second lieutenant of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers. He enlisted at Peoria, Ill., August 16, 1861, and served constantly without furlough until January 1, 1863, the latter part of the time being on detached service with Brigadier-General Tuttle, of the ambulance corps. At about that date he was ordered by Brigadier-General Tuttle to report to his own regiment, his regiment at that time being at Youngs Station, La. He heard that his regiment was then ordered to St. Louis. He was about starting for, or had started for, St. Louis to meet his regiment when he was informed that his mother was dying, and he went on to see his mother for a few days; returned to St. Louis, intending to join his regiment, but met his captain, who had been very severely wounded, and his captain asked him to stay and take care of him for a short time. He did so for two or three weeks, perhaps three weeks, and then returned to his regiment. Shortly afterwards he was placed under arrest as having deserted or having been absent without leave. Later he was tried by court-martial and found guilty of being absent without leave and sentenced to dismissal from the service.

He stayed, however, in the service from the 1st day of July, 1863, until the 31st day of January, 1864. A little later his case was brought to the attention of the Judge-Advocate-General and, on the recommendation of the Judge-Advocate-General, President Lincoln set aside the court-martial findings and restored Lieutenant Blood to duty, or, at least, said he might be recommissioned and restored to duty in some other place. He, however, did not serve after January 31, 1864. For some reason which I do not understand, in 1893 a bill was passed by Congress setting aside the findings a second time and giving him an honorable discharge, providing, however, that he should receive no back pay, bounty, or other emoluments by reason of the bill. The Committee on Claims recommends—and this recommendation is supported by General Ainsworth, who then, I think, was in the auditor's department—payment to Lieutenant Blood for the time that he actually served without pay, i. e., from the 1st day of July, 1863, to the 31st day of January, 1864. He, however, asked for a somewhat larger sum on account of a servant's pay, but there is no proof before your committee of any servant having actually been employed by him, so that the committee recommends that he be paid the amount that the bill provides—that is, his actual lieutenant's pay and subsistence during the time that he actually served from the 1st day of July, 1863, to the 31st day of January, 1864, which amount was $563. This amount, we believe, should be paid.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I quite caught the full significance of the statement made by my friend from New York, and I would like to ask him a question in order to clear the matter in my mind. Is this a bill to compensate a man who had been dismissed from the service because he remained with the army after that dismissal, and during which period of time for which claim is brought here he had no connection with the army?

Mr. WALDO. My understanding is he actually served with his company during all of this time, and it is proved before the committee that from the 1st day of July, except a short time he was away, taking care of his wounded captain, to see his dying mother, and on his way back to the regiment. With that exception, he was actually in service with his regiment until the 31st day of January, 1864.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I suppose the gentleman from New York knows that there are hundreds, possibly thousands, of bills before the Committee on Military Affairs, and possibly before other committees, in the form of claims, asking Congress to recognize as services rendered to the Government of the United States the mere presence of people in the army—camp followers they are frequently called—and to recognize it, in the opinion of the committee generally, would be a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, in this case it seems to me it is quite different. This man, in the first place, had served with courage and gallantry for two years. In the next place, he never was a deserter actually, but was going direct to meet his regiment. Hearing his mother was dying, he was away a few days to see her, and then came back to join his regiment, and at the request of his superior officer, his captain, he stayed helping take care of him when he was in a very dangerous condition from severe wounds.

At once, on the ending of his service to his captain, he returned to his regiment, and that this was not deemed a desertion may be seen by the fact that the Advocate-General recommended that he be relieved from all penalties resulting from the court-martial and that he be allowed to be again appointed as a second lieutenant in the army.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He was actually convicted, however, of desertion before a court-martial?

Mr. WALDO. No; the conviction was for being absent without leave.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Depending on the length of time of his absence?

Mr. WALDO. Depending on the length of time he was away.

Mr. SPARKMAN. He remained, performing services, until the order relieving him had gone through the usual channel up to the superior commander and had been approved by him. That took several months, and all the time he was with his command ready to perform, and no doubt performing service. It is for that time that this bill provides payment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am still impressed that the dangerous precedent might be used to vex and embarrass the Committee on Military Affairs, which has hundreds of cases of this sort.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is no case of a camp follower.

Mr. WALDO. If the Committee on Military Affairs will limit its favorable action to cases like this, where the Judge-Advocate-General recommends that the decision of the court-martial be set aside and the soldier relieved from the penalties, and where the President of the United States has approved that and recommended that the soldier be reinstated in his position, I believe that the Committee on Military Affairs will have no trouble.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. I could not quite hear all that was going on; but as I understood it, this Mr. Charles S. Blood was a lieutenant in the civil war.

Mr. WALDO. Yes; in the Forty-seventh Illinois Regiment, Company A.

Mr. PRINCE. Connected with a volunteer service?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. When his term of service expired, did he receive an honorable discharge?

Mr. WALDO. I am not sure what the result was of the President's order, but afterwards he received an honorable discharge from Congress.

Mr. PRINCE. Then, I will ask you if he received special legislation by Congress that has in it the provision, "provided, no pay, bounty, or allowance," and so forth?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly; that is the reason this application is made here; that he should be paid for the actual time he served.

Mr. PRINCE. That is the reason why I am objecting to this measure, or at least calling the attention of the committee to it and letting them determine. We think it is about enough when we set aside the dishonorable charge against him of a court-martial to permit him to be restored to his rights as a soldier, so that afterwards he has a pensionable status and can receive a pension. I do think that the Committee of the Whole House ought to go a little slow in setting aside by a special act the provision that we make that it shall not apply to back pay or allowance. Here is a measure that sets at naught every provision that the Military Committee thus far has provided for in the past in this class of legislation. This is the purpose of my objection. Now, here is an officer that was absent without leave. He did not receive honorable discharge from the service on account of his own conduct. If his conduct was not reprehensible, he had his means of appeal from one board to another until it finally officially reached the President before official action had been taken. It seemed that he failed to follow his own line of relief. Later on he comes to Congress, and Congress relieves him because The Adjutant-General recommends it; and I wish to say to my colleagues in Congress that when the Military Committee receives an intimation of that kind we are glad to carry out the suggestions of the Adjutant-General, and have in many, many instances removed the charge of desertion.

But the point I am objecting to in this bill is that there is always a provision put in that the House yesterday heard discussed when the question was raised by my colleague from Illinois as to why it was done in one way with reference to the Military Committee and why it was done in another way with reference to the Naval Committee. We did it for the good of the service, and we did it for the good of the officers, because we believe, if they, knowing the law, absent themselves without leave, they ought not to be reimbursed for their pay; they ought not to be at the same time put upon a pensionable status and placed upon the same roll of honor that their comrades in the civil war are placed upon. And I think Congress has gone about as far as it ought to go in this case when it has given him a pensionable status and has said to him by legislation, accepted by him when he brought the bill here, that "if we put you back upon a pensionable status you shall not ask for back pay and allowance." But here he comes and asks the committee and Congress to set aside its rulings of long standing.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, this man's absence was honorable, and if the cause of his absence had been known at the time—that he was taking care of his wounded captain—he probably never would have been court-martialed. At that time there is no question he was absent without leave, and that is what the court found. Not only was he dismissed from the service, but the court-martial fixed a penalty, and it should have been set aside and he put back in his position. I believe Congress was not called upon to give him an honorable discharge. He was entitled to one and should have been given one under the order of the President.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do you hold that a man who had been separated from the army by a court-martial, who remained there purely as his own voluntary act, earned money under a contract existing during that period between him and the Government?

Mr. WALDO. There was no contract, or he would have got his money.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Government by the action of the court-martial had distinctly declared that they did not want him.

Mr. WALDO. But in the meantime the order of the President does away with the court-martial, and all the penalty fixed by the court-martial should be done away with it.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from New York that it was supposed at one time that that did set aside and relieve from the penalty, but from a subsequent investigation and the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General it is held when a court-martial has had its findings and they have gone into effect after the functions have ceased and he is separated from the service that the President has no power, but that after this you have got to go to Congress to restore him to an honorable status and relieve him of the charge of absence without leave. The President had no authority to do it; the Adjutant-General had no authority; and we are furnished case after case of the kind that you are now discussing with the view of giving the relief. I say to you, gentlemen, that when we find a case of that kind we have reported it to Congress, and Congress has passed upon it; but when we are asked, as we are being asked right now, to take an officer who comes here and seeks to overturn all the legislation Congress has passed in cases of this kind, I say if you pass this bill there would be a flood of bills coming upon Congress. There are men putting in their whole life watching every legislative act of Congress and twisting and turning it into precedents by which claim and pension attorneys can bombard Congress and get legislation of this kind. So I ask in good faith that this bill do not pass in its present shape.

Mr. WALDO. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASKINS. I want to state for the information of the committee that this court-martial was held on the 23d of August, 1863, in the field. This claimant, Lieutenant Blood, continued with his company and regiment down to and including the 31st of January, 1864. The army was on the move down through Mississippi. After the court-martial there was a finding made, and the judgment of the court-martial was not communicated to him until that time, and then he left the service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do I understand you to say that the court-martial rendered this judgment in August, and the findings were not communicated to him until January?

Mr. HASKINS. The hearing was in August and the finding made in October, and he continued right along with the army. It was stated that the findings did not reach him until January.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think my friend from Vermont understood me. My question was, The court-martial was had in August and the judgment of the court rendered when?

Mr. HASKINS. In October.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the advice did not reach him until January, when he separated from the command.

Mr. HASKINS. He separated right along. I think it ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can throw any light on this subject after the discussion or not. It is stated in the report that the reason this lieutenant was absent from duty for four weeks was because his mother was ill; and secondly, principally, because he found his captain was severely wounded and needed his care. Owing to such absence without leave he was court-martialed and discharged, although a large part of the time had been given to the care of his captain's wounds. That is the report of the committee, based, I assume, on the statement of the person for whom relief is sought.

I doubt whether there is any warrant at all for the statement. The man was court-martialed. He made no such claim at the time he was court-martialed. He subsequently made an application to the President for reinstatement or permission to be reinstated in the army, and up to that time he had not learned that he was absent from duty, a deserter, because he was taking care of his captain who had been wounded. He did not discover that he had been detained by taking care of his captain who had been wounded, until many years had passed after the close of the civil war, and then he came to Congress and asked to have an honorable discharge granted to him so that he could obtain a pension. For the first time he learned then that on his way back to his command he had met his captain severely wounded, in St. Louis, and had spent the time taking care of him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. At this court-martial did the soldier have an opportunity to present evidence to that effect?

Mr. MANN. Why certainly. The soldier was present at the court-martial.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has he ever been asked why he did not present that evidence at the time?

Mr. MANN. He has not been asked by me.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By anybody?

Mr. MANN. There is nothing to indicate that he ever has been.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the record disclose any reasons for his silence?

Mr. MANN. It discloses no reason for his silence on that point, so far as I have been able to ascertain. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] probably can explain it, if there is any reason, and I am perfectly willing to yield to him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What the gentleman from Illinois has said is exceedingly significant. Here is a man court-martialed for being a deserter. At the court-martial he did not present an excuse which apparently would have been valid had it been presented, but years after the finding of the court-martial he presented this defense.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That excuse was presented in a petition gotten up and numerously signed by his brother officers and presented to the proper officials, who finally set aside the finding of the court-martial, and within a few months or weeks after that finding.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] speaks in entire good faith when he says that that fact was set up in the petition of the officers, and yet the gentleman is mistaken. I have a copy of the petition, the same as the gentleman has.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the fact?

Mr. MANN. These are what the facts were stated to be as his excuse for not being present with his command:

> It is shown by the testimony that the accused, being on duty at the headquarters of Third Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, near Vicksburg, Miss., received, on the 29th of June, 1863, an order from Brigadier-General Tuttle, directing him to report for duty to the officer commanding his company, at Young's Point, La. It was also shown that for several days after receiving this order the accused was necessarily engaged in the performance of duties required of him by a previous order, and it appears, from his own statement before the court, that before he had completed the performance of these duties he received a letter from his father informing him that his mother was extremely ill, supposed to be at the point of death, and was most anxious to see him. The accused further states that he had been in the service over two years without visiting home, and that, following the impulse produced by his father's letter, he at once started in fulfillment of what he believed to be the dying request of his mother, with the purpose of remaining at home not more than three days, but learning on his arrival there of the fall of Vicksburg, he remained at home seventeen days.

Not a word about the sick captain.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then follows the petition.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in there about a sick captain.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If you will pardon me, the statement in regard to the petition goes on to say:

> Seventeen officers of the First Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, petition the President to reinstate this officer to his former rank and position in the army, because he has always borne an excellent reputation as a thorough and efficient officer, whether in camp, on marches, or in action, and with the exception of the offense for which he was dismissed he has as clear a record of duties faithfully discharged as any officer need have; that he remained more than six months with his regiment after his trial always ready and anxious for duty.
> The president and judge-advocate of the court that tried the accused concur with the petitioners in the object of their prayer. These officers state that as no defense was made the court could not do otherwise than it did, but that in their opinion there existed, outside the record, "at least a good partial defense, and that the accused was not guilty to the extent apparent on the record."

Now, of course, when these charges and specifications were read charging the claimant with being absent without leave——

Mr. MANN. There is nothing yet about the sick captain.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Lieutenant Blood, being an honorable man, had nothing to do but plead guilty, but the officers present knew the circumstances, and they at once petitioned that the order of the court-martial be set aside, which was afterwards done.

Now, with the permission of the gentleman, I will read what General Ainsworth says in regard to the act of Congress and the good record of this party:

> It will be observed that the sentence of the court-martial required that the officer should forfeit all pay and allowances due him from the 2d day of July, 1863, and that in the act for his relief it was provided that he should not be entitled to pay or allowances by virtue of the act from the date of his dismissal to the date of the muster out of his regiment. It will also be observed that he remained present with the command until about January 31, 1864, a period of six months from the date from which his forfeiture of pay began, and three months and a half from the date of the promulgation of the order of dismissal. No reason is seen why he should be paid, as is proposed in the pending bill, to the date of the muster out of the command, October 11, 1864; but as it has, in effect, been determined by Congress that he was unjustly dismissed, no reason is seen why he should not receive the pay and allowances of his grade to January 31, 1864, the approximate date to which he remained under military control.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Nor does he suggest any reason why it should be done.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of my friend from Wisconsin to the fact that the sick captain is still missing. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. He is still sick, is he?

Mr. SPARKMAN. These are the mitigating circumstances referred to by his brother officers.

Mr. MANN. No; the mitigating circumstance was that he went home at the request of his father to see his mother, whom he believed to be dying, and that excused him for that offense. Now, I will extend further time to the gentleman, if he wishes it, on the sick-captain plea. Now, this man, having discovered long after the occurrence that he had been tried by court-martial and pleaded guilty——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long?

Mr. MANN. In the Fifty-second Congress he showed up.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And that was in 1893.

Mr. MANN. Long after he had been present at the court-martial and had pleaded guilty to the charges and the specifications, had filed a petition to have the order of the court-martial set aside to the extent of having him recommissioned, he discovered that he was in St. Louis taking care of a sick captain during all that time. In 1892, when he wanted the charge of a dishonorable discharge removed and he be given an honorable discharge, then he discovered for the first time that he was on duty in St. Louis taking care of a sick captain; and because of this unique discovery, and probably without a full knowledge of the real facts in the case, Congress passed a bill granting him an honorable discharge, with the provision that—

Said Charles S. Blood shall be entitled to no pay or allowance by virtue of this act from the date of dismissal to the date of final muster out of his regiment.

Now, the gentleman, in urging the passage of this bill, stated that this man was on duty with his regiment. Well, in a way that is true. What was he on duty at? Under arrest. Not performing services, but under arrest. Here is a man who is under arrest with his regiment, court-martialed, dismissed, and thinks he is entitled to be paid for that time on the ground that he was on duty with his regiment.

The President of the United States, in the kindness of his heart, revoked, as far as he had the power to do, the order which forbade his readmission to the army. The man went home with the power, so far as it was understood at that time, to come back to be recommissioned in the army, but he did not come back.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any statement from the captain?

Mr. MANN. No; no statement from the captain, no statement from anybody. Probably the captain is still sick. [Laughter.] The only statement on the subject is from the man himself, and not made at the time.

But even if that were all true, General Sherman, in approving the sentence of the court-martial, said:

The proceeding, finding, and sentence in this case are approved. No amount of good reputation will justify a desertion from duty such as this case exhibits, and the officer should be dismissed.

Now, having restored him to the roll of honorable men serving in the army, they placed him upon the pension roll in addition, and now, never satisfied with what he receives, he insists that he shall be paid for his services in the regiment while under arrest.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I did not know that this was a military case until I came to look at it. It seems to me that this gentleman has already got his remedy. The case was thoroughly considered in 1893, and a bill was passed that provided for this whole question of pay—that he should get no pay after October, 1863, the date of his dismissal by court-martial. The claim is made in this bill that he should be paid from July, 1863. I do not know why. It is suggested that he was not paid to October. He had the right under the last bill to get pay until October. He was given an honorable discharge as of that time. But I see no reason for his claiming from July 1, 1863, until January, 1864. Now, just one word as to the circumstances. We all know that Vicksburg surrendered July 4, 1863, and this man was ordered on June 29 to return to his regiment, and he did not go. He went off to see his mother.

Mr. MANN. And a sick captain.

Mr. PARKER. And a sick captain which we did not hear of until thirty years afterwards, in 1893. My rule has always been, and I have heard it to be a rule always, that where a statute of the United States is passed dealing with a special case and considering all the facts at the time that statute is to be considered as final. It is the decision of a court. We are a high court of the last resort in that regard, and I am unwilling to pass any further special legislation in this case for that reason.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, some remarks have been indulged in calculated to reflect upon the character and truthfulness of the claimant here. I want to say that I have known Lieutenant Blood, or Captain Blood, as he is called in my State, residing, as he does, not a great way from the city in which I live, for several years, and I want to state further that there is no more honorable or truthful man in the State of Florida, none more worthy of belief than Captain Blood. I would take his statement at any and all times regarding any fact, whether it was for or against him. It may be that there is nothing in the record as the same is shown in this report in regard to what some gentlemen here call the "sick captain," but if Captain Blood says, and he does say it, that there was a sick captain who requested him to remain with him, or, rather, a wounded captain, and that, too, his own captain, who requested him to remain with him, and he did remain with him, I believe what Lieutenant Blood says about it. I know it is true.

Something, too, has been said about the act that was passed—the act of 1893—directing the Secretary of War to set aside the findings of the court-martial in the case of the claimant.

Now, I was of the impression that the order of the President removing his disabilities was sufficient. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], however, says it did not. Without questioning that opinion, I will say this, that if the act of 1893 had permitted him to be paid, we would not now be here. If, indeed, there was any law on the statute books which authorized this payment, we would not be here asking the passage of this bill; but there being no law allowing it, we are here, and I say to this House that in my judgment he ought to be paid. There is no reason why he should not be compensated if he was improperly dismissed, if an injustice was done him, as the department has practically said was the case. If he suffered such a wrong at the hands of his superiors, then he ought to be paid for the time that he was present and was willing to serve and discharge his duty to his country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where was the captain when he was sick?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman means the wounded captain?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not know. Captain Blood states that he was out performing some special duty, detached from his command temporarily, and was ordered to return. Just about that time and before he had performed the service for which he was detached, he learned of his mother's illness, supposed to be fatal at the time; he had not seen her for two years, and he turned aside to visit her. Having been with her a few days he started to rejoin his command at St. Louis, I believe, and met his wounded captain, who requested him to remain with him for a while.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This report says that the captain was in St. Louis. St. Louis at that time must have had 200,000 people, approximately. What necessity was there for this soldier during the siege of Vicksburg, ordered back to his regiment——

Mr. WALDO. The siege was over at that time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, they needed him at the front. What reason was there for him to disobey orders, his captain being sick in a large city where there was abundant hospital attendance?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I had not noticed that he stated he was in St. Louis. As I understand, he was ordered back to St. Louis to join his command; and if his command was there and his captain was there, he was not absent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the third page of the report there is this language:

While on his way back he found his captain, who persuaded him to remain with him a few days at St. Louis, as he (the captain) was severely wounded and needed his care.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, the fact still remains that he did remain with his captain and at his captain's request. He was, it is true, absent without leave, and being absent without leave, he was tried and dismissed; but his superior officers, when they understood all the facts—that he had been improperly dismissed; that there were extenuating circumstances; that these extenuating circumstances ought to have spoken in his favor at the trial, and would perhaps have done so if they had been known—had the disabilities removed. That being the case, this man ought to receive the small pittance provided for in this bill, even though he may be drawing a pension.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is altogether different from the cases the Military Committee have had before them. They have not yet been able to find any case that stood on a par with this one; where the soldier was at once, as soon as the facts were brought to the attention of the superior officers, reinstated and all the penalties of his dismissal removed. Undoubtedly if he had made application at that time, he would have received his pay. It is only because he was not paid at that time that he is now coming here. Now, the fact that Congress may have done something that it ought not to have done in 1893, so far as I have been able to ascertain since I have been a Member of this House, has not prevented Congress from doing what it ought to do now, and that is the condition here. This man ought to receive this money. He earned it. He was hardly dealt with; very wrongfully dealt with, I believe. That is what the President thought; that is what the Judge-Advocate-General thought; that is what The Adjutant-General to-day thinks, because he says Lieutenant Blood ought to be paid. I think he ought to be paid, and no amount of sneers at a man, a mere boy at that time, because he stopped to take care of a wounded officer ought to influence this House against him. It may be funny, but it does not appeal to me as such; perhaps it may to the gentlemen who indulge in it. I think it is far from funny to indulge in that kind of thing. The statement of facts is contained in the report and was adopted by the Fifty-second Congress, and I certainly think that as much credit should be paid to that as to unfounded sneers indulged in upon this floor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, my distinguished friend from New York, seems to consider that probably I am out of place in the method I adopt in calling the attention of the House to this matter. It seems to me extremely ludicrous, I must say extremely ludicrous, that a great committee like the Committee on War Claims could be imposed upon by a case like this. It may not seem ludicrous to him, and to the Treasury of the United States it is not ludicrous at all——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Committee on Claims was also imposed on, because they made almost the same report, the bill having first been improperly referred to that committee.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Committee on Claims is sometimes imposed upon, and I am quite sure myself if I were on the committee that my genial friend from Florida, of whose constituents I am one a portion of the time, might be able to impose upon me, and yet in the House I am not willing to yield entirely to his wishes in the matter. This man has absolutely no foundation for the claim that is made. He is entitled to be paid under the law up to the time that he was dismissed, as provided by act of Congress. That money he does not need to come to Congress to get. All he needs to do is to file his claim in the War Department and receive his money up to the time that he was dismissed, as now shown by the records, which records have been falsified by direction of Congress to that extent. The man was under arrest. He was never taking care of a wounded captain. He went home to see his mother in the face of an impending battle. Whether that is the reason his mother was sick I do not know, but there was a battle coming on. He received word to go home, and he went home and stayed there until after the battle was over. He went back to his command and was placed under arrest. He takes credit for staying with his command. You would think from reading this report that he was there fighting, taking great credit for being with his command. He was under arrest; he could not help himself. The only reason he stayed with his command was because he was charged with being a deserter and was arrested awaiting the disposal of his case. Now it is proposed not only that he be restored to the honorable roll, which has already been done, but that he be paid for his desertion.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill now under consideration be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved that the bill now under consideration be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason why we should not take a vote on this bill now. I think the man ought to be paid. We have the report of the present Adjutant-General, the statement of the auditor as to the amount that is recommended to be paid, and General Ainsworth recommends it be paid——

Mr. MANN. Oh, General Ainsworth does not make any such recommendation.

Mr. WALDO. He does; you will find it on page 8.

Mr. MANN. It says here:

No reason is seen why he should be paid.

Mr. WALDO. "Should not be paid."

Mr. MANN. "No reason is seen why he should be paid."

Mr. WALDO. No, sir. [Laughter.] You will find that on page 8. That is not the way it reads. (Reading):

No reason is seen why he should not receive the pay and allowance of his grade to January 31, 1864. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will possess his soul in patience, I will read what it says:

No reason is seen why he should be paid as is proposed in the pending bill to the date of the mustering out of the command, October 11, 1864.

And the word "not" is not in there. It ought to be in there, but it is not. The gentleman reads this as he sometimes reads other things, imagining what is there.

Mr. WALDO. Have the Clerk read it, if we can not get it straight.

Mr. MANN. We will have the Clerk read it. But the report I have got does not have the word "not" in it. Now, what General Ainsworth said was, practically, that this man was entitled to be paid without regard to the act of Congress up to the date that he is mustered out, up to the date of his honorable discharge, given him by act of Congress, but he does not recommend anything beyond that, and he does not recommend that.

Mr. WALDO. I ask that the Clerk read that clause on page 8 of the report of F. C. Ainsworth, now Adjutant-General of the Army.

Mr. MANN. If he will read the last sentence I will be greatly obliged to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No reason is seen why he should be paid, as is proposed in the pending bill, to the date of the muster out of the command, October 11, 1864; but as it has, in effect, been determined by Congress that he was unjustly dismissed, no reason is seen why he should not receive the pay and allowances of his grade to January 31, 1864, the approximate date to which he remained under military control.

Mr. WALDO. That, Mr. Chairman, is all that we ask for. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill as amended aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 10.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAMASCUS BAPTIST CHURCH, GORDON COUNTY, GA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14733) for the relief of the trustees of the Damascus Baptist Church, of Gordon County, Ga.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the trustees of the Damascus Baptist Church, of Gordon County, Ga., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, being for the destruction of their said church building and the appropriation of the material of which said building was constructed to the use of the army of the United States during the civil war.

Also the following committee amendment:

In line 7 strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand two hundred."

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of the bill I have introduced asking for an appropriation to pay the Damascus Baptist Church, near Resaca, Gordon County, Ga., for the damages done to it by the Union Army under Gen. William T. Sherman in 1864.

I do not believe that anyone will question the fact that the material was taken from this building and used for building blockhouses, stockades, and a pontoon bridge across the Oostanaula River at Lays Ferry for the use of the army, and I am sure, if there happens to be on the other side of this Chamber some veteran of Howard's or Sweeny's corps who remembers the details of that march from Resaca to Kennesaw Mountain, that he will vouch for the truth of my statements.

There are at least three Members of this House who were with General Sherman's army in its campaign through the district which I have the honor to represent—General SHERWOOD, of the One hundred and eleventh Ohio Volunteers; Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, a member of the Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and who was severely wounded at Resaca; and Mr. KNOFF of Illinois. These three gentlemen were there, and did valiant service for the Union.

I do not know that these distinguished gentlemen had an intimate hand in tearing up this church and using it for the pontoon bridge; they were only three out of between one and two hundred thousand Union soldiers who might have done it. They can certainly testify that when General Sherman wanted to cross a river he did not stop to order lumber to build a bridge from the lumber trust, and bolts and rivets from the steel trust, and then wait until the railroads, congested with business, would deliver them, and then have his engineering forces build the bridge. If he could find anything that suited his purpose, even a church, he would take it and have it charged to the United States Government; and his credit was good, too. He could get anything he wanted in my district, and nobody ever demanded the cash from him.

He needed that church, and he took it; he was combating about 50,000 brave men of the southern army, and he did not want them to get away; and he knew they would if he stopped to send off to get lumber to build that bridge; so when he found that church standing near where a bridge ought to be built he thought about Elijah and the ravens and he felt that Providence provided for him as well as for Elijah.

Whenever General Sherman's army and our heroes in gray mixed up together a big graveyard was established—a graveyard with trenches filled here with gray uniforms and filled there with blue, whose wearers in both cases had died for their conceptions of right and duty. And now, when nearly fifty years have passed, the memories of their deeds are the common heritage of Americans who, whether from North or South, claim an interest in all the virtues that characterized those mighty deeds.

While speaking of those strenuous days I wish to say that I probably have a better right than any other man in this Chamber to claim a share in the glory of both sides—for I was on both sides. I was in but one battle, but that was the great battle of Chickamauga. I was in the Union lines at the beginning and in the Confederate lines at the end. I did not desert; but I was one of the few who stayed where they were when the Confederates advanced. Of course no one can blame me for being annexed to the Confederacy. I at least stood my ground, and that is more than the brave soldiers of the North can say for themselves in connection with that occasion. I secured no favors whatever for my part in that fight, and for several years after this military service I was spanked at home and flogged at school, just as if I had not been a veteran.

In volume 38 of the Records of the Rebellion, page 59, I quote from the report of Maj. Gen. William T. Sherman, sent under date of June 6, 1864, as follows:

On the 13th of May I reached Resaca. The enemy had evacuated Dalton and occupied Resaca in force. I did not hesitate to attack him, though strongly intrenched. Sending a division (General Sweeny's) of the Sixteenth Corps with a pontoon train to Lays Ferry, with orders to cross the Oostanaula, there to threaten and, if necessary, attack the enemy's line at Calhoun. * * *

Also in the same volume, page 64, under date of September 15, 1864, General Sherman says:

On the 14th of May we found the rebel army in a strong position behind Camp Creek, occupying the forts at Resaca and his right on some high chestnut hills to the north of the town. I at once ordered a pontoon bridge to be laid across the Oostanaula at Lay's Ferry in the direction of Calhoun, a division of the Sixteenth Corps, commanded by General Sweeny, to cross and threaten Calhoun. * * *

From the same volume, pages 128 and 129, I quote from the report of Capt. Orlando M. Poe, of the Engineering Corps, as follows:

During this time the labors of the engineers were confined to reconnoitering, road making, and bridge building. Pontoon bridges had been built over the Oostanaula at * * * Lay's Ferry, and two flatboat bridges over the Coosawatee.

The date of this report is October 8, 1864.

Quoting from the report of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, of the Army of the Cumberland, dated June 5, 1864, in regard to the operations of his army for the month of May, 1864, on page 142 of the volume referred to above we have the following:

Information was received by daylight on the 16th that Johnston had evacuated Resaca, and directions were given for the whole army to start in pursuit. Our troops occupied the town about 9 a. m. and commenced repairing the bridge over the Oostanaula, which had been partially burned by the enemy; a pontoon bridge was also thrown across above the railroad bridge, so that by night Howard's corps had got across and marched on Calhoun. * * *

These records tell us that pontoon bridges were built over the Oostanaula River at Lays Ferry, and they can neither be denied nor contradicted, and I will now read you some affidavits from persons who were present at the time. I read first the affidavit of Mrs. B. Roe:

STATE OF GEORGIA, County of Gordon, ss:

In the claim for pay for Damascus Baptist Church, near Calhoun, Gordon County, Ga., personally came before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county and State, Mrs. B. Roe, a citizen of Calhoun, Ga., age 68 years, whose post-office address is R. F. D., Calhoun, Ga., known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

"She was raised near the Damascus Baptist Church, near Calhoun, Ga., and was living about 1½ miles from Damascus Church in May, 1864, when Gen. W. T. Sherman's army came into the settlement; that the church building was on or near the Western and Atlantic Railroad; that affiant knows that the church building was taken down by the officials and troops under General Sherman and was used in the building of a stockade for the federal troops on Western and Atlantic Railroad and was not burned, but was used for this purpose, and some of the material may have been used for rebuilding railroad trestles or bridges; that a number of railroad bridges and trestles had been destroyed by the Confederate army and were rebuilt by the forces under General Sherman, and church buildings, schoolhouses, or any material needed for this purpose was taken and used.

"The Damascus Baptist Church building was a frame and was a good building; was weatherboarded on outside and was ceiled with nice dressed ceiling plank; on the inside was seats made of thick plank, dressed and well made, and was all in good condition; that the building was of good size, but just how many feet long or wide I can not state, but remember there were two doors at the end entrance, with three rows of seats from end to end, and must have cost from one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars to build. She further declares that she has no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

"Mrs. B. ROE."

I will also read the affidavit of T. W. Johnson:

CALHOUN, GORDON COUNTY, GA., May 8, 1906.

Before me, a notary public for said county and State, comes Tilman W. Johnson, who, being sworn, states that he lived about 3 miles north of Calhoun, in Gordon County, Ga., in 1864–65; that he was not of the age required to enter the Confederate army, and was allowed to remain at his home and pass in and out of the federal army line, and in this way knows Damascus Baptist Church, located near affiant's house, was taken and used for army purposes by the Federal Army; that a part of the material from this church was used in building a blockhouse for the federal troops stationed at or near the church, on the Western and Atlantic Railroad; that the building was destroyed for the use of the United States Army by the forces under General Sherman in 1864; railroad bridges and trestles were repaired by Sherman's forces; pontoon bridges were built across the river at Resaca, near this church, and the church building was used in these works and the blockhouse. The building was a frame, and was well finished, and of good size, some 40 feet by 50 or 60 feet, weatherboarded on outside and well ceiled and floored on the inside, with wooden-frame benches for seats, and was comparatively a new building, in good condition.

The cost of the building affiant can not give, but to the army must have been valuable at the time taken and used.

T. W. JOHNSON.

I will also read the affidavit of G. W. Smith, who was a Union soldier with General Sherman:

Affiant states that he was partly raised in Decatur County, Iowa, and volunteered from that county, and was with General Sherman on his march south from Chattanooga, Tenn., and was stationed at different places on the Western and Atlantic Railroad from May to October, 1864, and the Seventeenth Iowa Regiment did post duty all this time on this railroad, and now well remembers that church buildings and other buildings were used by the officers and troops doing post duty for the building of quarters for men and stock, and for railroad bridges, trestles, or pontoon bridges. Affiant remembers of being put on details to help haul timbers, lumber, forage, and anything found in reach of those posts for army use; that the church was taken and used in this way for the United States Army under General Sherman.

G. W. SMITH.

The petition of the Damascus Baptist Church is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

Your petitioners, the pastor and trustees of the Damascus Baptist Church, of Gordon County, Ga., petition your honorable body for relief, to wit: For the payment of the Damascus church building taken and used by the federal forces under General Sherman in May, 1864.

That said building was not burned, but was taken down and used in the building of a stockade, wood fort, and pontoon bridges for the protection of the United States guards and sentinels stationed on the W. & A. R. R., as your petitioners are informed and of which we submit proofs to show as we here allege.

That your petitioners ask the sum of $2,500 to be appropriated for the payment of this church building; that said church was a large frame building, in good condition, and was taken away and totally destroyed for church use and was applied to United States military use by the United States Army, as is here alleged.

J. J. PENDLEY, Pastor.
J. M. MEDOWS, Deacon.
J. W. TATE, Deacon.

The affidavits of these persons who were present tell us that the material in this church was used by the Union Army in building stockades, or blockhouses, and pontoon bridges; these parties are in every way worthy of credit, and, besides, what would be more reasonable? Here is an army on a rapid march, anxious to get across a river, and here is a large church building almost on the banks of the river, and what would be more natural or reasonable than to use the lumber most available for building the bridges? Anyone familiar with the construction of pontoon bridges will readily agree that the materials in a wooden church building are well adapted for such bridges, and especially useful when time is an important element.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any question as to the fact that this church was destroyed and used by the army for military purposes, and I am not here to censure or blame those in authority for so doing, for I recognize the fact that in such cases the rule is to use that which is most convenient and available, and I further believe that the fact that this church property was so taken and used by the army is conclusive proof that its use was urgent and necessary.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the members of this church should be reimbursed for the damages sustatined. It is needless for me to argue before this intelligent body that church and school property do not stand upon the same footing as the property of individuals, or even what is generally called "public property," but I will take the time to read rule 34 of section 11 of the rules governing the army in the field, found on page 86 of the report of Calvin B. Cunningham:

As a rule the property belonging to churches, to hospitals, or other establishments of an exclusive character, to establishments of education or foundations for the promotion of knowledge, whether public schools, universities, academies of learning, observatories, museums of fine arts, or of a scientific character, such property is not to be considered public property in the sense of paragraph 31, but it may be taxed or used when public service may be required.

Since it is one of the rules of civilized warfare that this class of property is not to be taken and used except in cases of necessity, I think it nothing but just and right to pay for its destruction and use when so taken, and I trust that no Member of this House will object to the payment of this small claim. I only ask for twelve hundred dollars, when the proof shows that the property was well worth twenty-five hundred dollars; and I will add just here that I am well acquainted with the people of this section, and they are very much in need of this money to rebuild their church.

Mr. Chairman, this section suffered as sorely by the war as any other part of the South. No part of the United States, with the possible exception of that extending from Bull Run to Petersburg, has written in its surface so much of the history of those terrible times. My district is a district of battle grounds—Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Ringgold, Rocky Face, Dalton, Resaca, Calhoun, Cassville, Big Shanty, New Hope Church, and Kenesaw Mountain were all scenes of bloody conflicts. Sherman, with his magnificent army, was pressing on to Atlanta, and from there to that terrible march to the sea; and Johnston, with much smaller numbers, but brave and always defiant, was turning back nearly every day to give blows and receive them. It was like two combatants in the prize ring, one by his superior weight constantly bearing the other down, but not gaining an inch that was not stained in blood.

General Sherman said "War is hell," and it was such to the people of my district. No people ever suffered more and none ever met adverse fate with greater courage, and none ever recovered more quickly. The same qualities that made good soldiers made enterprising citizens, and there is an inspiring difference between this section to-day and the battle-blighted region of forty-four years ago. The smoke of factories and foundries, the hum of the machinery of industries, the fertile soil well tended, yielding abundant harvests, all announce the progress we have made and all now proclaim the blessings of peace; and my people to-day love this great Republic as devotedly as if they had never loved another whose memory they still cherish.

This property for which we are asking payment belonged to no individual; it was the property of the Damascus Baptist Church; the title to it had been handed down from those who had gone before to be held in trust for those who should come after, and there is no question of loyalty in this case. The Damascus Baptist Church was a noncombatant. Situated as it was in the heart of the mountains of north Georgia, it is possible that some of its members followed the Stars and Stripes in the armies of the Union, but a large majority, doubtless, cast their fortunes with the armies of the South, and followed the stars and bars of the Confederacy until it was furled at Appomattox; but this question is not an issue here—this church as a church was a nonpartisan, and from its steeple waved neither the flag of the Union nor of the Confederacy. Long before the first gun had been fired at Fort Sumter and the terrible struggle between the States had begun, this church had been organized and built for another and different purpose; its mission was a mission of "peace on earth and good will toward men," and to teach men and women to be better, to love one another, and to return good for evil. The members of this church were enlisted under the white banner of the Man of Galilee, and had declared their allegiance to Him who rules the universe, and their loyalty has never yet been questioned.

Mr. Speaker, the war between the States is over; a large part of those brave men who took part in those dreadful conflicts have passed away, but this old church is still engaged in her peaceful mission persuading men and women to walk in the straight and narrow way. Very few, perhaps, are left who fought under her white flag in 1864, but others have taken their places to carry on the work for which the church was organized.

It makes no difference what may be our creed or belief, we will all agree that the influences of churches for good can not be estimated, and very few would be willing to live in a land where the sound of their bells is never heard.

We all know that they can not be successfully sustained without sufficient funds, and, as I have already said, this church needs the money. It is a just claim and ought to be paid, and I trust that no voice will be heard in this body in objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon what evidence did the committee proceed in arriving at the amount of $1,200?

Mr. LEE. Well, they just decided they would cut it half in two, although all the proof showed that it was worth $2,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it a mere guess the committee indulged in arriving at that amount?

Mr. LEE. That was acceptable to the gentleman who introduced the bill, or rather he agreed to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did he make that as an amendment before the committee's action or after?

Mr. LEE. While the committee was acting they said there would be some question about the value, although all the proof showed that it was $2,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. The church is still in existence and the money will go to the trustees?

Mr. LEE. It was reconstructed with a smaller one.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the money is to be paid to the trustees of the existing church?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason why the committee did not send the matter to the Court of Claims to arrive at the value of this church, rather than merely giving a guess at the amount?

Mr. HASKINS. I will answer that question. Because the proof was clear and overwhelming of the taking of this church by the federal troops for the purposes mentioned in the bill, and the only question raised among the committee was the value. It was a wooden church, and we did not believe it was worth $2,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was testimony taken as to the value of the church?

Mr. HASKINS. Yes, sir. The committee has some knowledge about buildings, and we believed that was an exorbitant price.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there was ample proof to justify the committee in arriving at $1,200?

Mr. HASKINS. Without any doubt. It was a clear case.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to oppose bills of this kind in connection with a church, and I would not for the amount involved here if it did not set a bad precedent. Now, one word in opposition to the passage of this bill. I have listened with some interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], who says that the church was torn down and the material used in the construction, in part at least, of a pontoon, and perhaps some other parts for fortification and other things. I understand from the chairman [Mr. HASKINS] of the committee's remarks that he put this claim upon the ground that the material was used by the army in the progress of a military campaign. That ground, Mr. Chairman, was talked about in 1863 in the Congress of the United States as a basis of a claim against the United States, and there was a decision made by the Court of Claims long ago upholding allowance of claims of that character. When the war was over——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman means that the Court of Claims held that it was not necessary to prove loyalty in cases of that character?

Mr. KEIFER. We have not the question of loyalty here, because the parties making the claim for this property are the trustees of a church, and while it has not been decided whether such trustees constitute a corporation, yet the loyalty question has generally been treated as not involved in the claim of a corporation or quasi corporation.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think the gentleman and I possibly agree, but I do not think he understands the suggestion I made. The Court of Claims held that where cases had been referred to it, and the claimants were churches, like this, that the question of loyalty was not involved and could not be raised.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not recollect the decision on that subject, but I am not going to raise that question in this instance. I think the Supreme Court, in 16 Wallace, page 496, went further than the gentleman suggests, holding that in no case where a corporation is involved did the question of loyalty enter into the consideration of this class of claims. But the doctrine of paying this class of claims has been reviewed from time to time. When the war closed, a controversy arose between the United States and Great Britain as to a large number of claims of various classes put in by citizens of the British Kingdom. A commission was appointed, known commonly as the "Hale Commission," and Hon. R. S. Hale made the report to the Congress of the United States later. The commission was appointed from very distinguished lawyers of England and this country, and, as I recollect the report, the first proposition——

Mr. HASKINS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not like to be interrupted in the midst of a sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not refuse to yield, but I want to make this statement.

Mr. HASKINS. I raise the question that the gentleman is not talking to the bill. You are talking about ancient history.

Mr. MANN. If this is not ancient history, what is?

Mr. KEIFER. This claim is 44 years old. It arose in June, 1864. I am talking of a historical question, and I will bring the gentleman to a place where he ought to have been long ago. That commission settled the first question, which was whether or not an English subject could rightfully maintain a claim against the United States for property destroyed by either the Union or the Confederate army in the course of military campaigns and in the movement of armies, and it classified all this property under the head of the devastation of war, and the commission unanimously reported—the English commissioner concurring—that there was no valid legal claim for any of it, and all of that class of claims was unanimously rejected by the commission. Still the controversy went on from time to time here in Congress. I was more familiar with it thirty years ago than I am now.

Later on the question got into the Supreme Court of the United States, and the very question made here, that my friend who is so fearful of ancient history ought to know about, came up, and was decided by that court, Justice Field announcing the opinion of the court, which was, I believe, entirely unanimous, that all cases of this kind were not maintainable as proper claims against the Government of the United States. The gentleman [Mr. HASKINS] shakes his head. I will call his attention from memory to the case of the United States against the Pacific railroads, in 120 U. S., page 227. You will find the doctrines laid down completely and fairly there. I wish somebody would send over and get the volume so my friend can read it.

Mr. HASKINS. I have read that case a good many times. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] does not understand, or, if he understands, he does not make the distinction that is made in that case and every other, that where property is destroyed as a military necessity, then the Government is in no wise responsible for it, but where property is taken and used by the federal army, in that event the Government is responsible. That is the distinction.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had waited until I reached the question of distinction, he would not have put himself so completely in contradiction of the Supreme Court's decision. Now, I will come to that. Where property is destroyed by the general devastation of war there is no controversy about that. Where an army is moving through the enemy's country and goes to a mill and gets flour of a person who is loyal to the Government, takes it and uses it to feed the army in the ordinary maintenance of the army, that latter class has been excepted, and forage is likewise paid for when taken merely to supply the ordinary needs of the army; so of other things. But, then, wherever property is taken for the purpose of meeting an emergency, to protect an army in battle, for fortifications, temporary or otherwise, or to facilitate the movement of the army, it is never paid for. I have not the report here, but I will give the gentleman a chance to see it, and he can find it without doubt. I have a case before me that was under discussion here in the Fifty-ninth Congress. Take the syllabus of the Supreme Court case I have referred to. I find it quoted in the volume of the RECORD, part 1, volume 41, page 653.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have listened with great pleasure to the gentleman's speech. Does the gentleman contend that Congress has not the right to change that law or to change the rule cited, or is it his contention that Congress should not?

Mr. KEIFER. I claim that Congress should not. What Congress may do as a matter of power in paying these claims is not a matter of legal right, but, of course, is another question altogether.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did we not pay the Philippine Catholic Church claim of a similar nature at the last session?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not go into other controversies now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We certainly did. The sovereign can and should be equitable toward the injured citizen. Relax harsh rules.

Mr. KEIFER. The syllabus of the cases of the United States against the Pacific railroads, in its first proposition, is this:

The United States are not responsible for the injury or destruction of private property caused by their military operations during the civil war.

Mr. HASKINS. That is right.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman nods as though he knew what that meant.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think I understand it as well as the venerable gentleman from Ohio does.

Mr. KEIFER. I will read further from the court's opinion, delivered by Justice Field, and then the gentleman will doubtless understand what that court meant in this proposition of the syllabi of the case.

I read from the opinion of Judge Field, found on page 233 of volume 120, United States Reports:

The war, whether considered with reference to the number of troops in the field, the extent of military operations, and the number and character of the engagements, attained proportions unequaled in the history of the present century. More than a million of men were in the armies on each side. The injury and destruction of private property caused by their operations, and by measures necessary for their safety and efficiency, were almost beyond calculation. For all injuries and destruction which followed necessarily from these causes no compensation could be claimed from the Government. By the well-settled doctrines of public law it was not responsible for them. The destruction or injury of private property in battle, or in the bombardment of cities and towns, and in many other ways in the war, had to be borne by the sufferers alone as one of its consequences. Whatever would embarrass or impede the advance of the enemy, as the breaking up of roads or the burning of bridges, or would cripple and defeat him, as destroying his means of subsistence, were lawfully ordered by the commanding general. Indeed, it was his imperative duty to direct their destruction. The necessities of the war called for and justified this. The safety of the state in such cases overrides all considerations of private loss. Salus populi is then, in truth, suprema lex.

These views are sustained in treatises of text writers, by the action of Congress, and by the language of judicial tribunals. (Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall., 357; Parham v. The Justices, 9 Geo., 341; Taylor v. Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, 6 Coldwell, 646; Mayor v. Lord, 18 Wend., 126.)

Vattel, in his Law of Nations, speaks of damages sustained by individuals in war as of two kinds—those done by the state and those done by the enemy. And after mentioning those done by the state deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, or a garden belonging to a private person is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart or other piece of fortification, or when his standing corn or his storehouses are destroyed to prevent their being of use to the enemy, and stating that such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only his quota of the loss, he says: "But there are other damages caused by inevitable necessity, as, for instance, the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from the enemy. They are merely accidents; they are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall."

The sovereign, indeed, ought to show an equitable regard for the sufferers if the situation of his affairs will admit of it; but no action lies against the state for misfortunes of this nature—for losses which she has occasioned, not willfully, but through necessity and by mere accident, in the exertion of her rights. The same may be said of damages caused by the enemy. All the subjects are exposed to such damages, and woe to him on whom they fall. The members of a society may well encounter such risk or property, since they encounter a similar risk of life itself. Were the state strictly to indemnify all those whose property is injured in this manner, the public finances would soon be exhausted, and every individual in the state would be obliged to contribute his share in due proportion, a thing utterly impracticable.

I read further from the same opinion:

The principle that for injuries to or destruction of private property in necessary military operations during the civil war the Government is not responsible is thus considered established. Compensation has been made in several such cases, it is true; but it has generally been, as stated by the President in his veto message, "a matter of bounty rather than of strict legal right."

In what we have said as to the exemption of government from liability for private property injured or destroyed during war by the operations of armies in the field, or by measures necessary for their safety and efficiency, we do not mean to include claims where property of loyal citizens is taken for the service of our armies, such as vessels, steamboats, and the like, for the transport of troops and munitions of war, or buildings to be used as storehouses and places of deposit of war material, or to house soldiers or take care of the sick, or claims for supplies seized and appropriated. In such cases it has been the practice of the Government to make compensation for the property taken. Its obligation to do so is supposed to rest upon the general principle of justice, that compensation should be made where private property is taken for public use, although the seizure and appropriation of private property under such circumstances by the military authorities may not be within the terms of the constitutional clause. (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115, 134; United States v. Russell, 13 Wall., 623.)

While the Government can not be charged for injuries to or destruction of private property caused by military operations of armies in the field or measures taken for their safety and efficiency, the converse of the doctrine is equally true, that private parties can not be charged for works constructed on their lands by the Government to further the operations of its armies. Military necessity will justify the destruction of property, but will not compel private parties to erect on their own lands works needed by the Government, or to pay for such works when erected by the Government. The cost of building and repairing roads and bridges to facilitate the movements of troops or the transportation of supplies and munitions of war must therefore be borne by the Government.

I understand from the report accompanying this bill of the committee that this building was taken for the purpose of a fortification in part and for the purpose of making a temporary bridge—a pontoon bridge, which is always a temporary bridge. It was taken for the emergency of that great campaign when Sherman was moving against Johnson from Chattanooga to Atlanta. It was taken in the midst of one of the bloodiest campaigns of all wars. Now, it is said it was taken merely for the use of the army. The distinction is very well made in the case cited that for everything that belongs to the general devastation of war or destruction of property by either army, in the prosecution of campaigns and in battles, the loyal or disloyal alike must suffer the damage sustained. As Justice Field states in his opinion, buildings and so forth used for bridges, fortifications, and the like during a campaign or battle are never paid for, while forage, commissary, and other needful army supplies taken in the ordinary course may be receipted for and paid for, because they are used simply for the maintenance of the army. That distinction or exception is the only one. Now, as I said before, the question is one of vital interest to this country. When we were dealing with subjects of Great Britain, when they were making claims against the Government, it availed itself of this law of exclusion, and Great Britain acquiesced.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose the army had gone into a dry-goods store and the soldiers had put on the suits of clothes and wore them off, would the Government be responsible?

Mr. KEIFER. Not under such a statement of facts as that; no. If they burnt them up or wore them off, the Government would not be responsible.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose the soldiers had been cold, ragged, without boots or shoes, and they had gone into the store and put on these things and worn them off, giving the storekeeper a receipt for what they had taken, and that they did it under the direction of their commanding officer.

Mr. KEIFER. Nobody would be responsible except the soldiers, if they could find them. It is where the commanding officer orders the supplies to be taken for the purpose of taking care of the army, feeding it, clothing it, or something of that character, that payment is made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is just the case I put.

Mr. KEIFER. Perhaps horses taken from a loyal person would come within the exception, but that which was taken without orders, taken unlawfully and not on the direction of the commanding officer, no matter what it is, what its character would be, the Government would not be liable for it, and it would be in the general class of devastation of war, and it would make no difference which army took it.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to correct him?

Mr. KEIFER. What is the correction?

Mr. LEE. The church was torn down by orders of General Sherman, and the material was used in a pontoon bridge.

Mr. KEIFER. Not altogether.

Mr. LEE. And for building fortifications.

Mr. KEIFER. And that is the very thing the Supreme Court says they have no right to claim for. In Justice Field's opinion he cites Vattel and others in support of that as being the universal law of nations.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Does the gentleman from Ohio claim that churches, school buildings, and eleemosynary institutions come under the same law, the same international law respecting war, that other property does?

Mr. KEIFER. It has always been so considered.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Does the gentleman say that Vattel says so?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. I am familiar with that; we discussed that twenty-five or thirty years ago in reference to the William and Mary College war claim, and while the claim may have been paid afterwards, it was paid as a matter of grace. I am not raising the question of loyalty here at all.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. There can be no question of loyalty here. I want to say that the William and Mary College claim was not paid as a matter of grace, but as a matter of right under international law.

Mr. KEIFER. Never; and there is no authority for it at all. Everything which belongs to devastation the Government is not responsible for. The William and Mary College case was one that stood on close ground. It was a case where the officers took the college building and used it for a hospital, and while so using it it took fire and burned down. It was not in the general class that this case is at all. It was not destroyed by a general movement of the army in open campaign and battle, as in this case, but it was an accident that took place while the college building was in the possession of the United States authorities, who were enjoying the use of it as a hospital. Such is my recollection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I think the gentleman will find the reverse true in international law—that is, the casualties of war are not paid for.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman. I can not be persuaded, having gone through the books and examined them. It does not regard churches, colleges, eleemosynary institutions, or any class of loyalty or disloyalty. Everything that is destroyed comes under the classification "general devastation of war," and must fall upon the sufferer. That you will find is the settled law now by the Supreme Court of the United States, and there they cite and quote to some extent authorities of other countries.

I have said this much, Mr. Chairman, more to enter my protest against the coming here at this late day of a large class of cases that should have been considered, if they had merit, long ago, and I think this belongs to a class of cases that was rejected as long ago as the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses. Perhaps not this particular case.

Mr. LEE. This case has never been rejected or heard before, but we made application years and years ago for a hearing on it and did not reach it.

Mr. KEIFER. That may be not the fault of the friends of the measure, but it is an old claim. We had claims of this character here in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, I remember, and we agreed pretty well on both sides of the House. A Democratic House in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses rejected this class of claims, following the rules that I have tried but have imperfectly stated here to-day. My protest is against opening the door now to their coming in in great numbers at this late day. I might say that it is not a matter of great merit to pay the trustees of this Baptist Church now. It may be another organization, and it is no more worthy of having a donation made to it at this late day than are other churches which suffered in other ways in the South and in some instances in the North. Probably not one of these trustees was trustee in 1864, when the building was torn down. None of the present trustees may have been living at that time, and we would be now making a donation to another generation that did not suffer immediate loss. It is not like paying to an individual or his immediate heirs a claim against the Government. We are making a donation to a present Baptist Church, worthy enough, I have no doubt, in every way, but it does not stand on any very high meritorious ground construed in that light.

My purpose is entirely accomplished when I say this, and add that I have hoped, and still hope that a time will come in this country when we will have a change in the Constitution of the United States so as to take from Congress the jurisdiction in particular or individual cases, to determine all classes of claims, and that we shall not sit here with 10,000 claims pending before Congress through bills and otherwise without being considered from year to year. From generation to generation we sit here considering these claims, when they ought to be determined in some judicial court or tribunal provided for under the Constitution, with a statute of limitations, and have an end put to them. There is a claim pending now before this House for a little over $300,000 presented by the administrator de bonis non, Robert E. Lee, jr., of the estate of one George Washington, deceased. It originated in about 1808, after his death—that is, it developed, but had its origin while he was President of the United States. We are here without any machinery to settle these questions—in this early part of the twentieth century sitting for the purpose of determining whether the Government does not owe George Washington's estate three hundred and odd thousand dollars. I go this much off of the line of discussion of the bill to earnestly express the hope that we will come to a time soon when we will have some other means of settling these claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to detain the committee at any great length on this bill. The bill provides and it establishes a practically new precedent for the payment of probably millions and millions of dollars' worth of claims. It provides for the payment for a church which was seized by Sherman's army and converted into material for blockhouses and in building bridges, trestles, and a pontoon bridge. As I understand the distinction between the claims for property taken by the army, it is this: For property destroyed by the army in actual warfare, there is no liability; property taken by the army for the use of the army for permanent use is to be paid for; property taken by the army en route for its temporary use is not to be paid for. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] makes the distinction only between property taken for the use of the army and property destroyed by the army.

Mr. HASKINS. I also make the distinction as to whether it is eleemosynary property, like schoolhouses, churches, and so forth. The courts make that distinction, and the law writers make that distinction.

Mr. MANN. There is no distinction made by any law writer so far as this line of thought goes on that point. There is quite a distinction about taking property of eleemosynary institutions which are not in opposition, which do not belong to the enemy, and are not considered as the enemy's property, but on this line of thought there is no distinction between property of an individual and the property of an eleemosynary institution. If the army seizes property of an individual to feed the army, to construct permanent buildings for the army, there is liability, and it is the duty of the Government to pay for it. If the army destroys property in war there is no liability, or if the army, in marching marches through a wheat field and destroys the property, there is no liability. If the army wants to cross a stream and cuts down a forest and uses it for a bridge, there is no liability. If the army cuts down a forest and constructs a permanent bridge for the benefit of the camp, there is liability. Now, the line is not always easily seen; it may not always be easy to tell which side of the fine line the case comes on.

But it is certainly easy, after all, to lay down the line which demarks the liability and nonliability of the Government. I am not prepared to say from the report of the case whether there be liability or not. The report does not indicate. If General Sheridan marched through this country and seized this church in order to construct a temporary bridge across the river in order to put his army across the river, it was like any other act of war, for which there is no liability on the part of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Do you not draw a distinction between that character of property and personal property—one that is necessary to be used for the purpose of conducting a successful victory, and the other church property, property of a State, of a school, or of an eleemosynary institution?

Mr. MANN. It makes no difference whether an army destroys a church in battle as between a church and any other kind of property. It makes no difference whether an army seizes a church in order for it to go ahead on its march necessary in a campaign; it makes no difference whether it is church or private property; but if the Government seizes property of an individual, it can say it seizes the property of people in insurrection——

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Correct.

Mr. MANN. Now, you can not say you seize property of a church in insurrection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The point is this: Can a church be in insurrection; can a schoolhouse be in insurrection? Is not that a character of property that can not commit the offense which you charge?

Mr. MANN. I was endeavoring to say—and I have said it four or five times, and the gentleman from Ohio more times—that that question does not enter into our position at all. For the sake of argument, say that a church—and that has been decided by the courts—was not in insurrection. It is perfectly plain that if an army has shelled a town and its shells had exploded in a church, that there is no liability on the part of the Government. [Cries of "Vote!"] If gentlemen who ask a vote would pay more attention to the discussion, they would learn more, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MEXICAN STEAMSHIP TABASQUENO.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is evident to my mind that there is a disposition on the part of certain members of the House here to prevent as many of these bills being heard as possible. Now, there is a very important bill that was drawn by me in consequence of the message that was sent to the House the other day by the President, which is the last bill on the calendar, which I desire to take up out of its order and have passed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will let us dispose of——

Mr. HASKINS. This is an important matter. Here is an international question that has arisen between this Government and the Government of Mexico.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long will it take?

Mr. HASKINS. It will not take over three minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I gladly yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill indicated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have waited twelve years to get this little bill up.

A bill (H. R. 23351) for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,485.70 to the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno, being for the arrest and detention of the ship and damage to her cargo during the war with Spain, the same being in full of their claim for the arrest and detention of the said ship and damage to her cargo by reason of the seizure by the U. S. S. Hawk, July 30, 1898.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, this Mexican vessel was on its way from Veracruz to the port in Cuba of Sagua la Grande and was seized by the American vessel Hawk and taken into Key West, where afterwards it was claimed by the Mexican Government that they had no contraband of war, and it was so found; and under the direction of the authorities or the Attorney-General the marshal was directed to release the vessel. It was released after seventeen days' detention. They allow five days for its return to Veracruz. The Mexican ambassador took this matter up with the Secretary of State. He made a claim for $73,977, being the loss at Key West during detention, $7,852.60; loss of prospective profits on cargo, $63,124.40; and moral injuries to the captain of the vessel, $3,000. This matter was referred by the Secretary of State to the solicitor of that department, who reported that the third item should be disallowed in toto. He stated as to item 2 that the $300 per day that was charged for the twenty-two days for detention was exorbitant, and that $1,500 would be a just and fair amount to be allowed; also $135.70 for port charges and $650 for attorneys' fees at Key West.

And as to the loss of the prospective profits on cargo, instead of $63,124.40, he reported that $11,200 was a fair and just allowance, making, in all, $13,485.70, with interest at 6 per cent from the date of seizure. The Secretary of State transmitted this report to the President with his recommendation that $13,485.70, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, be allowed the Mexican owners. The President transmits it to Congress with the recommendation that the amount recommended to be paid by the Secretary of State, and which the Mexican ambassador had agreed to accept in full consideration—that is, $13,485.70, with interest at 6 per cent per annum from date of seizure—be allowed. And so the committee, after an examination of the papers in the case, recommend the passage of the bill; but we say, in addition:

Your committee has made no allowance for interest upon the aforesaid claim as recommended by the solicitor and the Secretary of State, for the reason that it has not been the practice of Congress to allow interest upon claims against the Government. However, if the House is of the opinion that interest should be allowed upon this claim, then, in that event, the bill should be amended by inserting, after the word "cents," in line 6, the following words:

"With interest at 6 per cent from July 30, 1898, to date of settlement."

Now, I am not sure but that it is the duty of this Government to treat a foreign government or the owner of property residing in a foreign state somewhat differently from what we do our own people; whether the Mexican Government or the Mexican ambassador will consent to the settlement of this claim without the allowance of interest, of course I do not know. But to test the sentiment here of the committee, I would move that after the word "cents," in line 6, there be inserted the words "with interest at 6 per cent from July 30, 1898, to date of settlement."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Before the amendment is reported, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if that is not entirely changing the practice? Will it not be a very awkward thing to the committee to refuse the allowance of interest if that be done?

Mr. HASKINS. The Committee on War Claims refused to allow any interest, because it would be establishing, as they thought, a bad precedent.

Mr. MANN. Both committees have. We passed a bill yesterday to pay an Englishman $25,000 without interest, where his property was destroyed out West a number of years ago, and where we admitted our liability.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. If the gentleman will permit me, it is proper to state here that the payment of interest is part of the agreement between the Secretary of State and the Mexican ambassador. We would not be carrying out entirely the agreement entered into unless we paid the interest.

Mr. HASKINS. The Secretary of State says in his report:

The Mexican ambassador has accepted the calculation of the department with regard to the first three items above set forth.

That is, the $11,200 for the claim on the cargo, $1,500 for demurrage at Key West, $650 attorneys' fees at Key West, and the fourth item, which the Secretary of State says should be allowed, $135.70 for port charges, and as he closes his report he says:

With interest at 6 per cent per annum from date of seizure.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is quite sure that if the man had the right to bring a suit he can not recover the attorneys' fees.

Mr. HASKINS. No.

Mr. MANN. I am not raising any question on paying it to them, nor do I wish to interfere in any way with the settlement the Department of State makes, although I think they are rather easy marks when it comes to dealing with foreign gentlemen who have claims. If there is any kind of a claim held by a foreigner against this Government that will not be recommended for payment by the State Department, I never yet have discovered it. Yet we ought to be perfectly fair with these people whose property we seized, and seized, I suppose, without warrant of law, as we now admit. I do not want to see us get in a position where we are going to start in to pay interest on these claims. The committee having refused to do it want the House to overrule them.

Mr. HASKINS. We do not ask that. They can do just as they have a mind to do. The claim has been reduced from almost $74,000 down to $13,000 and a little over through negotiations with the Mexican ambassador.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "cents," in line 6, the following words: "with interest at 6 per cent from July 30, 1898, to date of settlement."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

JAMES E. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15737) for the relief of the heirs at law of James E. Wilson, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs at law of James E. Wilson, deceased, of Nashville, Tenn., the sum of $716, for property taken for the use of the army during the civil war.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "seven hundred and sixteen" and insert "five hundred" in lieu thereof.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee does not wish to make a statement, I will do so.

Mr. HASKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the relief of the estate of James E. Wilson and to pay his heirs at law. James E. Wilson was once a postmaster in Kentucky, appointed by President Lincoln. He and his wife have died in the last three or four years. He lived a number of years in Nashville. I introduced a bill for his relief between eleven and twelve years ago. Here is the basis for this claim: The United States Army officials, civil war, appropriated his property, as follows: Team of horses, valued at $400, and some hay. Major Wills, now perhaps our postmaster at Nashville, had his meadow mowed, and he took the hay, which was valued at $90. He also fed 40 men and horses, $80; honey, which he valued at $88; corn, $3; cedar picketing and bricks, $60. He also hauled disabled federal soldiers, two days, $5. Now, then, his eyes were very bad all that time.

This affidavit was made in 1899. The old man at that time had been blind for thirty years. His wife swears to these facts. Their daughters live in Nashville and are married. They say they remember about taking the horses, one being a "pet" horse. The old man says in his affidavit:

I have never before presented my claim for payment. The reason I did not do so was because I was old and had been blind for thirty years, and I have no one to help me in the matter. I learned that there was a man in Nashville who took these claims for collection, but that he kept one-half of the amount he collected. I did not put my claim in his hands for the reason that I would rather the Government should keep it all than pay that much for the collection of it. My children, also, were young at that time, and could not assist me in the matter. Now they have grown up, and I have had them look into it for me, and now for the first time I present my claim.

The good name of the husband, Mr. Wilson, is supported by the affidavits of Mr. W. T. Cooper and H. H. Dorris. Now, I happened to know him myself. The committee has three times recommended the payment of $500 instead of the whole amount, $716. He was an old Whig before the war, he says, and a Union man throughout the civil war. This is one of the first claims of this kind that I introduced when I came to Congress twelve years ago. It has been reported three times, and I hope it will be favorably reported to the House and made law.

I am ready to answer questions, gentlemen, if you have any.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL BEATTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13777) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100 to J. M. Beatty, administrator of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased, of Lee County, Ky., in full compensation for one horse sold to the Army of the United States during the year 1862.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will briefly explain the bill. It is to reimburse the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased, for one horse sold in September, 1862, to General Morgan, a Union officer, who, with his command, passed through that section of Kentucky at that time. There is no question of loyalty. Vouchers in duplicate were given for $100, the amount carried in the bill. The claim was first presented in 1866. Through a variance in the spelling of the name, which the officer gave in the voucher as "S. Baty," while the name was Samuel Beatty, and so stated in the application, the claim was rejected by the Quartermaster-General. It slumbered there for a great many years. At the request of his son and administrator, Gen. J. M. Beatty, who was himself a brave Union officer, I introduced this bill. The bill was referred by the committee to the War Department, and in turn to the Quartermaster-General, whose reply, embodied in the committee's report, renders it perfectly clear that there can be no objection to the passage of the bill.

In fact, this money ought to have been paid more than a third of a century ago, and I am only sorry that the practice precludes the payment of interest. The money is to be used by his son to erect a modest monument over the grave of the gallant old veteran.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Was it a good Kentucky horse?

Mr. LANGLEY. It was, I am informed; and they ought to be paid a great deal more than $100 for it, but the Beattys were so intensely patriotic that they did not charge the Government half enough for it.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print these three or four leaves from a report on cases where Congress has paid for the use, abuse, and destruction of churches. It is very valuable, and I ask unanimous consent to print it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Insular Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16143) to provide for payment of the claims of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with the following amendments:

In the blank space at the end of line 4, page 1 of the bill, insert the words "four hundred and three thousand and thirty."

In the blank space in line 5, page 1 of the bill, insert the word "nineteen."

In lines 12 and 13, page 1 of the bill, strike out the words "August 31, 1905," and insert in lieu thereof the words "January 15, 1906," so that said bill when amended will read as follows:

A bill to provide for payment of the claims of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands.

Be it enacted etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $403,030.19, the same to be paid to the Archbishop of Manila, in the Philippine Islands, as the representative (and trustee) of the Roman Catholic Church in said islands; and that the acceptance of said sum, paid under the provisions of this act, shall be in full satisfaction of all claims for use and occupation of the property of said church in said islands and for damages done thereto by the military forces of the United States prior to the date, to wit, January 15, 1906, of the official report of the "board of church claims," which said board composed of John A. Hull, lieutenant-colonel, judge-advocate; Alexander O. Brodie, lieutenant-colonel, military secretary, and J. W. Moore, first lieutenant, Second Cavalry, was duly convened August 1, 1905, at headquarters Philippines Division in the city of Manila, in said islands, to consider and report upon said claims.

From the time that the American Army landed in the Philippines, in the year 1898, until the complete return of peace in the islands, the Government of the United States, through its military forces, took possession of churches, contiguous parish houses, school buildings, seminary buildings, etc., and used them as hospitals, prisons, or barracks. After the cessation of hostilities, in many instances the occupation of the buildings had to be continued until suitable quarters could be constructed for the garrisons which remained in the archipelago, the entire time of the occupancy varying in individual cases from a few weeks to two years or more. This occupation by the Government wholly excluded the church authorities, preventing them from taking any measures for the protection of the property. Many of the buildings so occupied were fine structures. For example, the cathedral at Manila, a large stone building with high walls and a dome and possessing an interior ornamented by handsome woodwork, was used at one time to imprison between 3,000 and 4,000 Spanish soldiers. Buildings thus seized and occupied were often seriously damaged, sometimes partially or wholly destroyed.

As presented, the claims demanded compensation for occupancy and damages, not only by our own forces, but also by the insurgent forces, and were of two classes, namely, claims of the church proper and claims of the friars.

This report and the accompanying bill do not at all relate to the claims of the friars, but only to those of the Catholic Church proper.

These claims of the Catholic Church were presented at Manila before a board of officers called the "board on church claims," appointed under a special order of the War Department for the sole purpose of making an investigation and report. This board, composed of Lieut. Col. John A. Hull, judge-advocate; Lieut. Col. Alexander O. Brodie, military secretary, and First Lieut. J. W. Moore, Second Infantry, U. S. Army, was duly convened on August 1, 1905, at Headquarters Philippines Division, city of Manila, and at once entered upon what proved to be an exhaustive investigation, conducted under rigid rules and instructions prescribed therefor by the Secretary of War (see Exhibit A, post) and lasting for the better part of six months.

Your committee are convinced that the board was most painstaking and conscientious, and that it performed its duties with exceptional thoroughness and ability. All of the many witnesses before it were examined under oath. Moreover, the members of the board themselves were personally acquainted with the cities, towns, and villages in the archipelago where the structures in question were situated. Many of these they visited in order to determine as thoroughly as possible, from personal inspection, the rental value of the property and the amount of damage inflicted upon it by our troops.

The award of the board carefully excluded compensation, first, for damages done by the insurgents; second, for damages incident to military operations; third, for wanton damages by soldiers of the American Army; fourth, for use and occupancy and damages by servants of the civil government.

Fifty-nine of the cases presented by the church authorities were reported upon adversely, the board holding that no rent was due, that the damage was done by the enemy, or that it was an incident of active warfare.

The total amount claimed was	$2,442,963.13
The total amount awarded by the board was	363,030.19

A copy of the report of the board containing a complete list of the claims, and a detailed statement of its proceedings, findings, and award, is hereunto annexed. (Exhibit B, post.)

In the hearings before your committee, Secretary of War William H. Taft appeared as a witness and gave testimony at length, as did also Col. John A. Hull, U. S. Army, senior member of the board on church claims, and Maj. John Biddle Porter, judge-advocate, U. S. Army, at present assistant in the office of the Judge-Advocate-General. All of these witnesses were exceptionally well qualified, by reason of long experience in the Philippine Islands, to testify as to conditions concerning the claims in question. Your committee had also before it the original papers in the claims covered by the report of the board, and made frequent use of these during the hearings. All of the witnesses before your committee were united and positive in asserting that the award of the board was very conservative, Colonel Hull himself testifying that in his judgment $500,000 would not be an excessive award at this time. Secretary Taft was of the same opinion.

The testimony before the board, and also that before your committee, shows plainly that since the damage was inflicted there has in many cases been a very serious deterioration of the property, owing to its exposure to the elements. Bishop Rooker, now deceased, an American and a former resident of Washington, testified (December 5, 1906) under oath before the board, that if the Government of the United States were to grant the claims of his diocese (Jaro) just as they were presented, the condition of the damaged structures there would still remain "very much deteriorated in comparison with what it was before the war." He declared that "the sums asked for would be insufficient to put the property back to its original condition," because, "as time has passed, the deterioration to the damaged buildings has increased month by month. This subsequent deterioration was not included in the claims presented." The bishop testified that if a certain claim for $1,000 had been paid at the time the damages were inflicted this amount would have restored the property to its original condition, but that at the time he gave his testimony the restoration would cost not less than $5,000.

It was the testimony of Colonel Hull that the award of the board was "based not on the value at the time it was made (1905–6), but upon the value at the time of the occurrence (1898–1902)." He added:

"I probably have a more intimate knowledge of these claims than any other one man. I have gone over them all, and I know them intimately. I am confident that $500,000 would not be an excessive award at this time. * * * Prices have increased wonderfully from the time that I first went to the Philippines, in 1899, and I have no doubt that this has continued to go on. Five hundred thousand dollars to-day would not do any more than $363,000 would two years ago. It would do about the same."

The property mentioned in the claims was that of a noncombatant, an organization devoted to charitable, educational, and religious purposes. The damages were inflicted while the property was in the exclusive occupation and control of the Government of the United States. Payment for such occupation and damages can be sustained upon the principle that private property should not be taken for public use without due compensation.

Precedents for the payment of such claims by Congressional appropriation are numerous. Congress has from time to time appropriated money to compensate for use and occupation of the property of institutions—religious, educational, or charitable—and for damages done thereto by our military forces during the civil war. The following is a list of some of these appropriations:

"Forty-first Congress: The Kentucky University, at Lexington, Ky., was paid $25,000 for the use and occupation of their buildings by the United States troops. (16 Stat. L., 678.)

"Forty-third Congress paid the East Tennessee University $18,500 for use of its property. (18 Stat. L., 604.)

"Forty-eighth Congress donated 46,080 acres of public land to the University of Alabama, to be applied to the erection of suitable buildings for said university, which was destroyed by fire on April 4, 1865, during the military operations at Tuscaloosa. (23 Stat. L., 12.)

"Fiftieth Congress paid the Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tenn., $18,729.09, for stone and material taken and used by the military authorities of the United States during the civil war (25 Stat. L., 1188); the Baptist Female College, Lexington, Mo., $3,167.67 as compensation for rent of the college building while used by the United States Army for four years from 1861. (25 Stat. L., 1189.)

"Fifty-second Congress paid to William and Mary College of Virginia $64,000 to reimburse said college for the destruction of its buildings and other property destroyed without authority by soldiers of the United States Army during the civil war. (27 Stat. L., 744.)

"Fifty-third Congress paid to Washington College (now known as the Washington and Lee University), located at Lexington, Va., $17,848 for injury to its buildings, apparatus, libraries, and other property injured or destroyed by troops of the United States Army during the late war. (28 Stat. L., 1039.)

"Fifty-fifth Congress paid to the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South $288,000 as compensation for property of said corporation, including the buildings and grounds and all machinery and all material of every kind, used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its army, or for its benefit in any way, during the years 1864 and 1865. (30 Stat. L., 1401.)

"Fifty-seventh Congress paid (32 Stat. L., 234, 235) the following claims: To the trustees of the German Evangelical Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., $2,500 on account of the destruction of their church building and its furniture on February 17, 1863, while they were in possession of a portion of the military forces of the United States; to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg, W. Va., $1,850 for the use and occupation thereof by the federal troops from March, 1862, to April, 1865; to the bishop and trustee of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., $2,880 for use and occupancy of said church by the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion; to the Cumberland Female College, McMinnville, Tenn., $5,000 for the use, occupancy, and consumption of its property for hospital and other army purposes during the late war of 1861 to 1865 by the military authority of the United States; to the Richmond College, Richmond, Va., $25,000 to reimburse said college for the occupation of its buildings and grounds by the United States troops and officers for eighteen months commencing in April, 1865, and for injury and destruction of the buildings, apparatus, libraries, and other property of said college by said troops and officers; to the Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), at Clarksville, Tenn., $25,019.96 for use and occupation of the buildings and grounds, for material used, and for injury to its buildings, apparatus, and other property by United States troops during the civil war; to the Catholic Church at Macon City, Mo., $725 for use and occupation of said church during the civil war; to the St. Charles College, Missouri, such amount, if any, found upon investigation by the Quartermaster's Department to be due for use of its buildings and grounds by the United States military authorities during the civil war."

The only claimant that has ever asked compensation for damages to the property mentioned in the report of the board on church claims or for use of the same is the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands. The only other possible claimant for compensation for damages would be the Government of the United States or its grantees, if such there were, upon the assumption or theory that prior to the war the title to the property was in Spain, and that, therefore, by virtue of the treaty of Paris, it became vested in the United States. This assumption that the title to church property in the Philippines passed from Spain to the United States by the treaty of Paris has received attention in the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in an opinion rendered by Justice Willard in the case of Jorge Barlin, bishop, etc., plaintiff and appellee, v. P. Vincente Ramirez, ex-rector, etc., and the municipality of Lagonoy, defendants and appellant.

The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant Ramirez, alleging in his complaint that the Roman Catholic Church was "the owner" of a certain church building and other property belonging thereto, that defendant went into possession of the same as its representative, and asking that the church be restored to the possession thereof.

The answer of the defendant Ramirez, in addition to a general denial, admitted that he was in possession of the property with the authority of the municipality of Lagonoy and of the inhabitants of the same, who were the "lawful owners" of the property. The municipality of Lagonoy being permitted to intervene, filed an answer, in which it alleged that the defendant Ramirez was in possession of the property under the authority and with the consent of the municipality of Lagonoy, and that such municipality was "the owner" thereof.

The plaintiff replied to this complaint, or answer in intervention, and the case was tried and judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants.

In deciding the case the supreme court, Justice Willard rendering the opinion, expressly declared that the assumption that the Spanish Government was the owner of the property and that it passed by the treaty of Paris to the American Government is not true. Says the court:

"As a matter of law, the Spanish Government at the time the treaty of peace was signed was not the owner of this property, nor of any other property like it situated in the Philippine Islands."

If, when the treaty of Paris was signed, the Spanish Government was not the owner of the property in question in that case, "nor of any other property like it situated in the Philippine Islands," it follows, of course, from this decision of the court, that the Government of the United States has never had any title to the property mentioned in the claims presented before the board on church claims and appropriated for by the accompanying bill. This particular conclusion of the court was based largely, if not entirely, upon the laws of the Spanish Government defining the status of all property in the Philippines.

For generations before the war between the United States and Spain the exclusive right to possess, control, and occupy buildings devoted to religious purposes was in the church. If, for the purpose of argument, the decision above cited of the supreme court of the islands were to be ignored, it nevertheless can not truthfully be said that the relation of the Spanish Government to the property mentioned in these claims was ever other than that of a mere trustee. The Government of the United States can not, and ought not, to hold the property as trustee of any church, Catholic or Protestant.

Without respect to the legal title to the property, there can be no question that in equity it belonged to the Catholic Church.

The board on church claims included in its report a statement that:

"If Congress should in its liberality desire to compensate the church for the spoliation and carrying away of sacred ornaments, images, vestments, etc., we recommend that the sum of $40,000 be paid, as, in the opinion of the board, this sum would be fully ample."

The aggregate of the amount claimed by the church for these articles of cult and ornamentation was $298,222.50.

Your committee recommends the passage of the accompanying bill, as amended, providing for the payment of $403,030.19 to the archbishop of Manila, as representative and trustee of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands, this amount when so paid to be in full satisfaction of all claims for the use and occupation of the property of said church in said islands and for damages done thereto by the military forces of the United States, and also in full satisfaction for the carrying away and loss of articles of cult and ornamentation prior to January 15, 1906, the date of the official report of said board on church claims.

The sum appropriated by the accompanying bill includes no allowance for interest, as the payment by the Government of interest on claims would reverse its uniform practice.

PHILLIP HAGUE, ADMINISTRATOR.

The next business was the bill (S. 2027) for the relief of Phillip Hague, administrator of the estate of Joseph Hague, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Phillip Hague, administrator of the estate of Joseph Hague, deceased, late of New York City, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,742.66, in full of all claims by reason of loss, pilotage, towage, demurrage, and costs by him expended to estimate repairs of the brigantine Mary Margaret, by being run into by the U. S. transport steamer Belvidere in the harbor of Galveston, Tex., on September 19, 1865.

Mr. HASKINS. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

E. C. STURGES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13955) to compensate E. C. Sturges for property lost during the Spanish-American war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to E. C. Sturges, late captain First Illinois Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $268.02.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the exhaustive report of the Committee on War Claims, if gentlemen desire to hear it. It is not very long.

Several MEMBERS. Move to lay the bill aside.

Mr. MILLER. Let the report be read.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I would not like to see the gentleman from Illinois embarrassed, and I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. I insist on the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The report (by Mr. HASKINS) was read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13955) for the relief of E. C. Sturges, submit the following report:

Mr. Sturges was a captain in the First Illinois Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, which went to Cuba, and five boxes of baggage and all his luggage was kept by the Government on the transport City of Macon and never returned to him or in any way accounted for.

On November 9, 1898, a board of survey, consisting of three army officers, met to consider this among other cases. The board reported as follows:

"The board of survey appointed by Special Orders, No. 67, Camp Wykoff, September 2, 1898, to report upon facts relative to loss of personal property of officers, would respectfully report that they have examined the invoices herewith for property lost belonging to Capt. E. C. Sturges, First Infantry Illinois Volunteers, amounting to $268.02, and find same correct; said loss being caused by failure to unload steamer City of Macon at Siboney, Cuba, on account of said transport being ordered to proceed to Porto Rico before its cargo could be unloaded at Siboney. These articles were necessary to have in the line of duty."

This finding by the board of survey is amply sustained by the evidence in the case now before your committee, and the loss was not attributable to any fault or negligence on the part of Captain Sturges, and as it was the duty of the Government to protect the property which it was transporting on behalf of its employees, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the gentleman, has the department made any report in favor of this bill?

Mr. BURLESON. How much is the amount of the claim?

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to make a statement concerning the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to detain the committee, or those gentleman who have bills on the calendar, but I am perfectly willing to explain this bill, it being quite immaterial to me what is done with it.

The First Illinois Infantry was sent to Florida, and from Florida to Cuba. This gentleman was a captain in the regiment. When they landed at Siboney, they got off the boat in the water. The vessel went on to Porto Rico and carried his baggage with it. Subsequently the War Department picked up some baggage which did not belong to him, and made a report upon it. What became of that baggage I do not know, but the War Department was unable to find the personal effects of this gentleman. If the committee desire any longer explanation, I am quite willing to speak for an hour.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Is not that simply a case of property lost in war, and why was not this captain looking after his own baggage when he landed?

Mr. MANN. Because he was not, like the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES], at home. He was in the war, obeying orders of his superior officers, and doing what neither the gentleman from West Virginia nor I was doing, fighting for his country.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois says that the gentleman got off the boat in the water. I wish to ask him, was the boat in the water, or the gentleman? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Both. I wish to say that I know the gentleman from West Virginia would have been willing to fight if necessary. Everybody knows that, and I hope he will not take any offense at my remark.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HASKINS. I move that the committee do now rise.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask the gentleman to wait a moment.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am opposed to the motion that the committee rise. I have waited here two days, without lunch, to get this horse claim through, and I know how it feels to have to wait for these rare opportunities, and I want to stay with the other fellows whose bills come after mine.

Mr. HASKINS. I withdraw it.

HEIRS OF ASA O. GALLUP.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have been waiting all the afternoon to secure consideration of a resolution (No. 261) referring a bill to the Court of Claims. It is the next business in order.

The next business was the resolution (H. Res. 261), which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 17329) for the relief of the heirs of Asa O. Gallup, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act."

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move that this resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. KING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7037) for the relief of Benjamin F. King.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin F. King, late a private in Company A, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of an enlisted man of infantry from January 28, 1865, to June 19, 1865, including transportation to his home, deducting therefrom any money paid him during that period.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, this man enlisted as a private in an Indiana regiment and was sent to the front. Afterwards it was found that he was physically unable to perform the duties of a soldier and was discharged. The indorsement on the back of the discharge was that he was discharged because he was unfit for service when he enlisted as a soldier, and therefore he could not get any pay, because the inference was that he practiced a fraud on the Government. He served four or five months for the munificent wages of $13 a month. If the enlistment was fraudulent, it should have been stated in the discharge itself.

Mr. MANN. The fact is that he served from extreme patriotism.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, the next bill was introduced by Mr. STURGISS and reported by Mr. HAUGEN, and neither of those gentlemen is present, and I ask that it be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13476) for the relief of the State of Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to resettle the claim of the State of Pennsylvania against the United States for money paid to its militia for their services while employed in the service of the United States in the year 1863. And in such settlement said officers are directed to allow the State for money which it paid as interest on money borrowed to pay for said services, and also the expenses which it paid in procuring said loan.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay whatever money may thus be found due the State.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt but that this bill will give rise to considerable discussion. Several gentlemen have asked to be heard upon it. I doubt the propriety of taking it up so late in the afternoon, in view of the fact that these bills which have been considered must all come before the House.

Mr. MANN. I desire to discuss this bill quite fully myself.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I want to state, in justice to my colleague [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania] who introduced the bill and who asked me to look after it during its consideration, that in view of what the gentlemen have stated, I do not desire to detain the committee at this hour, and I therefore consent to the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection.

ERDMAN BODENSCHATZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16722) for the relief of the heirs of Erdman Bodenschatz, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $300 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the heirs of Erdman Bodenschatz, deceased, for and on account of 300 bushels of stone coal, of the value of $300, belonging to said Erdman Bodenschatz, which was taken and used in September, 1862, by officers of the United States in charge of a steamboat named St. Charles, which was then employed in the service of the United States, between the city of Cairo, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo., for which no compensation has ever heretofore been made.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM DOYLE AND HUDSON COOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution No. 276, in lieu of the bill H. R. 11605.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 11605) for the relief of the legal heirs of William Doyle and Hudson Cooper, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act."

Mr. MORSE. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The report shows the favorable consideration which has been given to the invitation by the Department of Commerce and Labor, and by the Biological Survey and the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, in view of which and in recognition of the liberal part which Austria took in the World's Fair at Chicago and the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, the Secretary of State recommends an appropriation by Congress of $250,000 to enable the Government of the United States to accept the invitation to participate in the exhibition.

COLORADO BOUNDARY LINE—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate joint resolution No. 78, "Establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico," for the reasons set forth in the following communication of the Attorney-General:

"I have the honor to report, with respect to joint resolution S. R. 78, referred by you to this department, that the purpose of the said resolution appears to be to correct the boundary line between the Territory of New Mexico and the States of Colorado and Oklahoma. The practical effect of establishing the new boundary line, so far as the State of Colorado is concerned, would be to remove from the jurisdiction of that State and add to the Territory of New Mexico a strip along nearly the whole of the southern boundary of the said State, in which there are located at least five post-offices and an appreciable number of inhabitants. So far as I am aware no action has been taken by the legislature of the State of Colorado assenting to or accepting the location of the boundary as proposed in this resolution, and from such inquiry as I have been able to make in the very limited time since the resolution reached me, I am led to think that such assent or acceptance on the part of the State is improbable. Under these circumstances, I think it is of very doubtful expediency to have the line mentioned in the resolution accepted by the United States as the true boundary. It is not necessary to express an opinion as to the legal effect of such a resolution upon the rights of the United States or of the Territory of New Mexico or the duties of federal or territorial officers; but it is clear that the resolution would not be binding upon the State of Colorado, and its adoption might lead to conflicts of jurisdiction within the long strip of territory to which I have referred, and possibly to the escape from legal punishment of those guilty of crimes committed within the said strip. If it is deemed desirable to establish the true boundary line, an appropriate method to effect this would be to invoke, by appropriate proceedings, the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court."

"I therefore respectfully advise that the joint resolution in question do not receive your signature."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1908.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it was understood that we would do no business to-day except routine business, and therefore I can not ask to have this matter disposed of.

I simply want to say, Mr. President, that the message must have been signed under a misapprehension of the facts. The joint resolution is not an attempt to establish the line, but to ascertain where the line is which was established in 1861 by the act admitting our State into the Union and subsequently by our state act. This last line has never been run by the Government of the United States. It is indefinite and uncertain, but probably is very near the actual thirty-seventh parallel, a line that can not be moved and can not be changed. It is there; and under the act the department was to find, if possible, where the line was.

Some years ago we made an appropriation for the purpose of ascertaining that line. The Department of the Interior employed a competent surveyor with a proper force and expended some $35,000, I think, in ascertaining where the true line was. The department received that report and approved of the line so far as they could.

The statement that the joint resolution materially changes the line is incorrect. I do not think that anybody could have informed the President about the line who knew anything about it. It does not materially change the line, but in some places it probably varies from a quarter to half a mile. No considerable injury could happen to anybody either on the New Mexican line or the other line.

So far as Congress is concerned, it has a right to fix the New Mexican line. It has no right to fix the Colorado line, I admit. The Colorado line is on the thirty-seventh parallel, and probably Congress has not any right to determine for the State of Colorado where the thirty-seventh parallel is. The right still belongs to the State of Colorado to determine it, which they would do in some way if the joint resolution should become a law.

Should there be a difference of opinion between the people of Colorado or the legislature of Colorado and the General Government as to where the thirty-seventh parallel is, then there would be a case for the Supreme Court. There is not any case for the Supreme Court as it now stands.

Mr. President, I consulted the Judiciary Committee with reference to this line. Our people are anxious to have the line established so that we may know where it is. The line has been surveyed, the monuments have been put up. It is undoubtedly on the thirty-seventh parallel, which must be the line. I do not suppose that Congress nor the State could change the line; at least it could not be done without the consent of both.

At the proper time I shall call the attention of the Senate again to the matter. I suppose the message should lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the message will lie on the table and be printed.

JOINT INAUGURAL COMMITTEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. KNOX, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BACON members of the committee on the part of the Senate, under concurrent resolution 52, to make arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order:

Ordered, That the Committee on the Census be authorized to have printed the hearings had before that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit to the Chair the question whether that is not in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is in contravention of the agreement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think we ought to live up to the agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. LONG. I hope there will be no objection to the order being made. The printing was practically ordered the other day, but there was a slight defect in the order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, when we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement under the circumstances under which this agreement was entered into, and a large number of Senators have left the city, we ought to adhere to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit the question to the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the order is in contravention of the agreement.

Mr. LODGE. If that concludes morning business——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. I was going to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator indulge me just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I feel that I should ask the Chair to hold the morning business open for a short time yet, because I am quite confident that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce will shortly be here to report the bill (S. 423) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof. The Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] informs me that he has sent word to him. I feel confident, as it is my duty to feel, that he is very anxious to report that measure. He is doubtless now at work putting the finishing touches to the report.

That I am justified in this view I think will be quite apparent when I call attention to the fact that in the very early days of the last session of Congress, indeed, on the 4th day of December, 1907, I introduced this little bill proposing to amend section 6 of the existing interstate-commerce act. The bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I saw the chairman and told him I was very anxious to have it considered at an early date. The chairman professed his very earnest desire to have it so considered, and he evidenced, I may say, a very deep interest in it, and assured me that it would shortly be considered.

Time continued to roll along. I did not hear anything of my bill. I called on the chairman. He said the only trouble was to get a quorum of the committee. So he started out to hunt a quorum. I found that a quorum of that committee is one of the most fleeting and elusive entities one could possibly chase after. But finally they did succeed in getting what may be called a "tentative quorum."

Mr. TELLER. What kind of a quorum?

Mr. FULTON. A tentative quorum. I use the word "tentative" myself simply because I do not know of a better name for it. The quorum was composed not of a majority of the Senators, but certain Senators left word that they were to be counted present for the purpose of listening, but would be absent should it come to voting. So they listened—at least I assume they did; certainly those who were present did—while I explained as best I could the merits of the bill, and they all seemed to admit that it had many merits. I was assured by the chairman that the bill would be given early further consideration.

Well, time continued to roll on, as it frequently does. The winter passed; springtime, "Gentle Annie," "ethereal mildness," and all that sort of thing, came trooping along and blossomed into "glorious summer." Yes, seedtime and harvest, as suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], finally arrived, but my little bill was still slumbering in the lap of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or, more properly, I should say, perhaps he continued to sit on it. [Laughter.] Of course there could be but one result: The bill has not yet arrived.

Very late in the last session, Mr. President, there was pending here a resolution known as the "commodity-clause resolution," to amend the commodity clause of the interstate-commerce act. I proposed my bill as an amendment to that joint resolution. Well, it seemed to hang as a sort of dead weight on the joint resolution, much to the annoyance of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. So he urged me and those who are interested with me in the bill to allow the amendment to be withdrawn. We consented, with the understanding that he would report this bill some time during this session previous to the holiday adjournment. To that he fully agreed, as the RECORD shows.

Now, seedtime and harvest, as my friend suggests, have come and gone since then; the time for adjournment for the holidays has arrived; but neither my bill nor the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee, has arrived this morning. I submit, however, to the Senate that I am bound to believe that he is hurrying to get here [laughter], and if the Senate will only wait a reasonable length of time I am quite satisfied he will arrive. [Laughter.] If he should, and find himself too late, afflicted as he is with that peculiar heart action, I fear the shock would prove fatal.

If I am mistaken, Mr. President, if I have been totally misled in this matter—which I can not believe—I feel it my duty to say now that at a very early day after Congress reassembles I shall feel obliged to call up a motion that I have now on the table, and that has been there since last session, to discharge the committee from the further consideration of this bill, at which time it may be necessary to read that portion of the RECORD which contains the agreement whereby the bill was to be reported at or prior to this date.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the hope of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is now hurrying here to present that report shows a confidence in human nature which is as beautiful as it is touching. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will pardon me for saying so, I have been in the Senate longer than he; and, if I may use the words of the elder Pitt, "Confidence is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom," and my confidence in the approach of the Senator from West Virginia with that report is slight. [Laughter.]

I move, Mr. President, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion and yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I simply want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he does not share in my confidence?

Mr. LODGE. I tried to express the fact delicately that I did not. [Laughter.]

Mr. FULTON. I want to say, Mr. President, it is with the most profound regret that I find the Senator from Massachusetts in that state of mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned; the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Monday, January 4, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 19, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts in gratitude and praise to Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, for Thine own best gift unto the children of men nineteen hundred years ago, the Light of the World, the incarnation of Thy love, the express image of Thy glory, the Annointed One whom Thou didst send to preach the gospel to the poor, to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captive, a recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, and preach the acceptable year of the Lord. Hence we pray for an universal faith in Him which shall sweep away all doubt and unite the whole family of mankind into one great brotherhood, an universal justice which shall right all wrong, an universal love which shall dispel all hate, bring in an universal peace, which shall indeed be stronger than war and unite all hearts in the glad acclaim, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." And now, O God, our Heavenly Father, as we separate to celebrate the glad event of the season, wreathe our faces in smiles, fill our hearts with generosity that we may feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and fill our homes with joy and gladness; and thus by example preach the acceptable year of the Lord and hasten the coming of Thy kingdom, that Thy will may be done in all the earth, in the name and spirit of Thine only begotten, our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale, offered the following prayer:

The God who made the world and all things therein, He being Lord of heaven and earth, is not to be served by men's hands as though he needed anything, seeing He Himself giveth to all life and breath and all things.

* * * * * * *

He made of one every nation of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth. He is not far from each one of us.

* * * * * * *

For in Him we live and move and have our being.

* * * * * * *

Whatsoever, therefore, ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets. * * * Overcome evil with good.

Let us pray.

Father of life, Father of love, our Father, Thou wilt show us how to do it. Help this Nation this day in its wish and prayer and hope to come to the help of those who are in sorrow, of those who are cast down in this great calamity.

Father, we are strong in Thy strength; we are glad in Thy joy. We have been prosperous in all our afflictions in Thy blessed providence. Now show us how we can carry Thy benefits to the ends of the earth, how we can lift up what has fallen down, how we can open eyes that are blind and the ears that are deaf, how we can carry Thy gospel of glad tidings everywhere, that we can bury the dead, that we can feed the hungry and the thirsty, that we can give strength to those who are weak, that we can give courage to those who are afraid.

Father, we ask Thee to help us to-day in to-day's duty.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 19, 1908, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

RELIEF OF EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS IN ITALY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The appalling calamity which has befallen the people of Italy is followed by distress and suffering throughout a wide region among many thousands who have escaped with life but whose shelter and food and means of living are destroyed. The ordinary machinery for supplying the wants of civilized communities is paralyzed; and an exceptional emergency exists which demands that the obligations of humanity shall regard no limit of national lines.

The immense debt of civilization to Italy; the warm and steadfast friendship between that country and our own; the affection for their native land felt by great numbers of good American citizens who are immigrants from Italy; the abundance with which God has blessed us in our safety: all these should prompt us to immediate and effective relief.

Private generosity is responding nobly to the demand by contributions through the safe and efficient channel of the American Red Cross Society.

Confident of your approval I have ordered the Government supply ships Celtic and Culgoa to the scene of disaster where upon receiving the authority which I now ask from you they will be able to dispense food, clothing, and other supplies with which they are laden to the value of about $300,000. The Celtic has already sailed and the Culgoa is at Port Said. Eight vessels of the returning battle-ship fleet are already under orders for Italian waters and that Government has been asked if their services can be made useful.

I recommend that the Congress approve the application of supplies above indicated and further appropriate the sum of $500,000 to be applied to the work of relief at the discretion of the Executive and with the consent of the Italian Government.

I suggest that the law follow the form of that passed after the Mount Pelee disaster in 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 4, 1909.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and not for the reason that any delay ought to take place, but a joint resolution should be framed in accordance with the suggestions of the President. I hope the Senate will remain in session so that at an informal meeting of the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution will be matured, and I shall hope to report it back within a very short time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the message of the President of the United States be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPOSITION IN TOKYO.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it be now considered.

The resolution (S. Res. 238) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

1. Whether the time of holding the great national exposition in Tokyo, Japan, has been postponed to a later date than from April 1 to October 31, 1912, and if so, to what date has it been postponed.
2. Besides the three commissioners-general and the secretary, what clerical and other assistants, if any, have been appointed under the act approved May 22, 1908, giving the names of such clerks and other assistants and the compensation allowed or fixed for each.
3. What amount as compensation or expenses, if any, has been paid to each of the commissioners-general, the secretary, and such clerical and other assistants as may have been appointed.
4. Whether, if the time of holding the exposition has been postponed, it is the purpose to continue the official tenure of the commissioners-general, the secretary, and such clerical and other assistants notwithstanding such postponement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I think the resolution ought to be adopted rather than referred to a committee. It is merely a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. MONEY. I ask for another reading of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution at the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. I think the resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not insist upon a reference. We have seen frequent statements in the public press that the great national exposition to take place at Tokyo has been postponed until 1917, five years from the original date when it was to be opened.

The object of the resolution is merely to get the facts officially from the Secretary of State, who, under the act of May 22, 1908, has the execution of the law in hand. That is the only purpose, and I trust the Senator will allow the resolution to be adopted rather than to be referred to a committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this matter has already been before the Committee on Foreign Relations, if I may say so, and they have discussed it with the Secretary of State, and legislation is now in preparation to cover the postponement. I think the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They have the subject now under consideration, and will procure for the Senate all possible information.

The resolution needs to be altered, in any event. It is not addressed as we address resolutions in regard to foreign relations, which are always directed to the President and not to the Secretary of State. I think it will be better to let the resolution go to the committee. I hope it will be referred.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduced a bill only a little while ago on this subject, and it went to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move that it be so referred?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the Senator from New Jersey has already made the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey made the suggestion.

Mr. KEAN. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit that the Senate did not understand the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the question is put I desire to say just a word.

If the information sought were information which it was important should be immediately acted upon, I should certainly favor the desire of the Senator from Texas that the resolution should be adopted at once. But there is no such emergency. There is nothing which can immediately transpire which makes it necessary that there should be action at this time on the part of the Senate.

If it were a matter which had not already been under consideration by the Foreign Relations Committee and a matter in which the Foreign Relations Committee were not already moving, I should also favor the Senator's desire that there should be immediate action. But when the matter has been for weeks before the committee and they are already engaged in gathering all the information, and have already partly acted upon it, and in accordance with that the chairman of the committee has introduced a bill on the subject, I think it is nothing but courtesy to the committee which have already proceeded in the matter that they should continue in the control of it.

The information, of course, must be had before the Senate can act upon the bill which has been introduced by the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the committee. The information, if it were had, could only be referred to the committee, in view of the fact that the bill, as I understand, has already been so referred.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to say that I have the utmost confidence in the Committee on Foreign Relations, which has the matter in charge. But the Senate itself, I think, is entitled to have this information and the country is entitled to have it.

The Senator from Georgia makes the special point that there is no emergency demanding this information. If the Senator will recur to the law passed by Congress and approved by the President on the 22d of May of last year, he will observe that there is an appropriation of, I believe, $50,000 to pay the expenses of the commission, or whatever it may be styled, with a view to the representation of this country at the exposition to be held from the 1st of April to the 31st of October, 1912.

Now, shall we continue to have that money expended by the State Department? It is only $50,000, it is true, but it is that much. Shall we continue to have that money expended from month to month when the exposition has been in fact postponed for five years, if that be true? Ought not the Senate to know, ought not the House of Representatives to know, whether the money is being expended when there is no necessity for it, if the current rumor with reference to the postponement is true?

I submit that it is in no sense disrespectful and in no sense discourteous to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the Secretary of State to give us this information now. There are other members of the Senate interested in the legislation relative to the exposition besides the Committee on Foreign Relations. Some other Senator, with the information before him, might introduce a bill with reference to this matter, besides the chairman of the committee or members of the committee.

I hope the reference will not be made.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I want to say only one word. The very purpose of the bill I introduced is to change the law so that we may stop this expenditure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], which is to refer the resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

TENNESSEE COAL AND IRON COMPANY.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 240), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

1. Whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by him or by his authority against the United States Steel Corporation, on account of the absorption by it in the year 1907 of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company; and if no such proceedings have been instituted, state the reason for such nonaction.

2. Whether an opinion was rendered by him or under his authority as to the legality of such absorption; and if so, attach a copy if in writing; and if verbal, state the substance of it.

JOSEPHINE DRAPER.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 239), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Josephine Draper, widow of Charles S. Draper, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

RELIEF OF EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS IN ITALY.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the President's message relating to the great disaster in Italy, reports favorably a joint resolution and asks for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. R. 109) for the relief of sufferers by earthquake in Italy and its islands was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the President of the United States to procure, transport, and distribute among the suffering people of Italy and its islands such provisions, clothing, medicines, moneys, and other articles as he shall deem advisable for the purpose of rescuing and succoring the people who are in peril and threatened with starvation in consequence of the recent earthquake, the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the action of the President in dispatching the naval vessels to Italy with food and supplies for the Italian sufferers is hereby ratified and approved.

In the execution of this act the President may use any vessels of the United States Navy and such other vessels as he may, in his discretion, employ.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just read?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I have asked the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to compile a statement covering precedents in cases like this—none of them, however, of such magnitude—and I ask that, when presented, it may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate and the public.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I believe if that be done it will simply be done in order not only to justify this, but to justify all future appropriations of this kind. I am one of those Senators who do not believe that the Federal Government possesses the power to apply the people's money in this way, and I voted "no" on the passage of the joint resolution. If it is sought to be established by precedent that the Federal Government does possess this power—and if it did possess it, I would be one of the first to exercise it in a great calamity like this—it seems to me that it is such a debatable question that it is not exactly fair to those who entertain views similar to my own to have it made a part of the RECORD here without any opportunity to analyze it and make such answer as we think can be made.

I am not going to object to the Senator's request, but I must remind him that there is no argument in this world so fallacious and so certain to mislead individuals and the public as the argument of precedents, when those precedents are made in the shadow of an appalling calamity. But, if the Senate desires, and if the Senator desires, that these precedents shall be collected and printed, I shall offer no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine suggests that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations is preparing precedents bearing upon similar appropriations heretofore made by Congress, and asks that when prepared the paper be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. Some days ago, Mr. President, by unanimous-consent agreement, what is known as the "omnibus claims bill" was made a special order for the 6th of January immediately following the routine morning business. I have received telegrams from some Senators who are very much interested in that bill and in items which they desire to offer by way of amendment to it, saying that they can not be here by that date. I am very loath to defer the consideration of the bill beyond that time, but I feel that I ought to submit the matter to the Senate. I therefore ask that the special order made for January 6 be vacated and that the bill be made the special order for Monday, January 11, immediately following the routine morning business, its consideration to be then begun and continued until it is concluded; not, of course, to interfere with appropriation bills or other orders.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish the Senator from Oregon would ask that the consideration of the bill be postponed until Thursday, the 14th, as I shall myself be absent until then. I expected to be here on the 6th, but I shall not be here next Monday.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator be here on next Tuesday?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I shall not be here until Thursday of next week.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from North Carolina, who is interested in this measure, can see that we are getting pretty well along in the session——

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that there is another member of the Senator's committee who is also very much interested in the bill, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER], who will not be here at the time named. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Oregon to ask for its consideration a week from next Monday.

Mr. FULTON. That is too long. I will adopt the first suggestion of the Senator, with the consent of the Senate, and ask to have the order entered for a week from Thursday next, which will be the 14th instant.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the date the Senator now asks to have fixed for his special order?

Mr. FULTON. The 14th.

Mr. FORAKER. Of January?

Mr. FULTON. Of January.

Mr. FORAKER. I have a bill which was made a special order that has lost its right as a special order, but I want to give notice that I expect to bring that bill up, and I think I shall have a right to insist upon its consideration when I do. I offered a resolution, which was adopted by the Senate, calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information, which I should like to have before I proceed with the further discussion of that bill. I am only waiting until the answer to that resolution shall come here in order to move that the bill be taken up and proceeded with.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator, I assume, refers to the Brownsville affair?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. But I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that the special order expired as to that bill, and my understanding is that when a special order is not renewed or continued it ceases entirely.

I will say again, however, what I said before when this matter was pending, that I have no disposition to interfere with any matters that Senators may specially desire to bring up at any time.

Mr. FORAKER. I thank the Senator for that statement. I only rose in order that we might have some understanding about it. I agree with the Senator, as I understand it at least, that my bill has lost its right as a special order and that it is simply on the calendar, but I want to take it up and insist on its consideration and the disposition of it as soon as I can possibly do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] asks unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement by which House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," was to be taken up for consideration on Wednesday, January 6 next, be modified so as to read "Thursday, January 14, 1908." Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I understand that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement excludes appropriation bills and also provides that the unfinished business shall not be interfered with?

Mr. FULTON. I simply ask to have the existing order continued, changing the date; and by its terms it does not interfere with the unfinished business or appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, immediately preceding the adjournment of the Senate for the holidays I took occasion to call attention to a pending resolution proposing to discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from the further consideration of the bill (S. 423) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof. I then stated that I should promptly call up that resolution immediately after the Senate reassembled, but I am advised by the chairman of that committee that a meeting has been called for the coming Wednesday to consider the bill, and as he is now very earnestly at work to secure a report, I am satisfied I may expect one at that time. Therefore I shall not call up the resolution this morning.

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 6055) to amend section 691 of subchapter 7, Building Associations, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment on page 2, line 25, before the words "anno Domini," to fill the blank by inserting "July;" and in the same line, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 691, subchapter 7, of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, relating to building associations, be amended so that the same shall read:

"SEC. 691. Objects.—The object of such corporation shall be the accumulation of a capital in money to be derived from the savings and accumulations by the members thereof, to be paid into said corporation in such sums and at such times as may be designated by the by-laws of said corporation, from which the members thereof may obtain advances upon their shares of stock: Provided, That the Comptroller of the Currency, in addition to the powers conferred upon him by law for the examination of national banks, is further authorized, whenever he may deem it useful, to cause examination to be made into the condition of any building association incorporated under the provisions of this chapter, as well as any other building or loan association located or doing business in the District of Columbia. The expenses necessarily incurred in making any such examination shall be paid by such association to the Comptroller of the Currency at the time of the making of such examination: And provided further, That every building or loan association located and doing business in the District of Columbia shall make to the Comptroller of the Currency at least one report during each year, according to the form which may be prescribed by him, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or secretary of such association and attested by the signature of at least three of the directors. The said comptroller shall also have power to take possession of any company or association whenever in his judgment it is insolvent or is knowingly violating the laws under which such company is incorporated, and to liquidate the same in the manner provided in the laws of the United States in respect to national banks: Provided further, That from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1909, no person, company, association, copartnership, or corporation, except corporations organized under and availing themselves of the privileges of this act, and except building associations heretofore organized and in actual operation before the passage of this act, shall conduct or carry on in the District of Columbia the kind of business named in this act, without strict compliance in all particulars with the provisions of this act. Any person, officer, or agent of any company, firm, or corporation who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be punished by a find of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. That any willful false swearing in regard to any certificate, or report, or public notice required by the provisions of this act shall be perjury, and shall be punished as such according to the laws of the District of Columbia. And any misappropriation of any of the money of any corporation or company, formed under or availing itself of the privileges of this act, or of any building or loan association located or doing business in the District of Columbia, or any money, funds, or property intrusted to any such corporation, company, or association, shall be held to be larceny and shall be punished as such under the laws of said District."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report in the case be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the report accompanying the bill be read. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Page 2, line 24, insert the word "July" after the word "of," and strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

The bill was prepared by and introduced at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter, in which the object of the proposed legislation is set forth:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 9, 1908.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill entitled "A bill to amend section 691 of subchapter 7, building associations, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia," and recommend its enactment.

There is no legislation in force in the District of Columbia for governmental examination of the condition of building associations doing business therein. It is therefore proposed by this bill to establish supervision over the affairs of such associations similar to that provided for in some of the States.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Mr. KEAN. This is a very important bill, and I hope it will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 24832) for the relief of citizens of Italy, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RELIEF OF EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS IN ITALY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 24832) for the relief of citizens of Italy, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the President of the United States to procure and distribute among the suffering and destitute people of Italy such provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessary articles and to take such other steps as he shall deem advisable for the purpose of rescuing and succoring the people who are in peril and threatened with starvation the sum of $800,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

In the execution of this act the President is requested to ask and obtain the approval of the Italian Government, and he is hereby authorized to employ any vessels of the United States Navy and to charter and employ any other suitable steamship or vessels.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hardly know what would be the proper and wise and prompt action in this case. Without criticising the House measure, I think the joint resolution passed by the Senate is more complete and perhaps covers the case better. Yet I have some hesitancy about making any issue with the House. The forms are different. The Senate joint resolution appropriates $500,000 and, in addition, authorizes the President to send supplies by naval ships and otherwise, and I think gives the President a larger discretion than is given in this bill. Yet I do not want anybody to say, through any feeling here, that the House has not done the right thing. Its intention is the same as ours, and I think, on the whole, I will ask the Senate to concur in the House bill.

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator from Maine moves the consideration of the bill I wish to ask a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask how would it do to allow the House bill to lie on the table for a few minutes to see if the matter can not be arranged so that the two Houses shall conform.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a good suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The House has adjourned, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HALE. The House has adjourned?

Mr. LODGE. The House has adjourned? Then there is nothing to do but to concur.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Maine a question. I was not giving close attention at the time the bill was read. I desire to know whether the bill and the Senate joint resolution, as well, cover the supplies which the newspapers inform us have already been sent. Does it do so in terms, or is it simply understood that they will be considered as embraced within its terms?

Mr. HALE. They are undoubtedly embraced within the scope of the bill as the House has passed it.

Mr. LODGE. It covers them.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the bill is completely in form, but as the House has adjourned and as I think there should be no question between the Houses and no delay, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. BACON. I think the statement of the Senator from Maine that that is the intention will cover any deficiency there may be in the terms of the proposed act.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt it is substantially just as good.

Mr. TELLER. I will say there is really but little difference. While the amount in the bill is greater than that named in the Senate joint resolution, the Senate measure contemplated some action that would probably bring the total expenses up to $800,000.

Mr. HALE. Yes. The amount involved in the end is the same in each measure.

Mr. TELLER. In each case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the votes by which Senate joint resolution 109, on the same subject, was ordered to a third reading and passed, be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the joint resolution be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next business on the calendar will be stated.

INSPECTION OF MEAT AND MEAT PRODUCTS.

Senate resolution 193, submitted by Mr. BEVERIDGE, December 5, 1907, proposing to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from the further consideration of Senate bill 912, was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. PERKINS. Let the resolution go over without prejudice.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. PERKINS. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

BUREAU OF MINES.

MONDAY, January 4, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we hail with joy and gratitude the new year, with all its hopes and promises, its manifold opportunities, and far-reaching possibilities.

We confess with penitent hearts our weaknesses, our sins, our failures, as individuals and as a nation.

And we most fervently pray that "forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, we press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

We deplore, beyond our poor power to express, the terrible calamity which has befallen the people of Italy, our sister nation. But we bless Thy holy name for the spontaneous outburst of brotherly love and sympathy which is going out from all the world to succor and alleviate the stricken people bereft of home and dear ones. Comfort them, we beseech Thee, with the blessed thought that in life or death nothing can separate them from Thy love and care.

Since we last met in this Hall the Death Angel has visited the congressional family and removed from our midst a wise and efficient Member, a patriotic citizen, a faithful servant of his people. Comfort his bereaved family, friends, and colleagues by the precious hope of immortality, and everlasting praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

RELIEF FOR EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The appalling calamity which has befallen the people of Italy is followed by distress and suffering throughout a wide region among many thousands who have escaped with life but whose shelter and food and means of living are destroyed. The ordinary machinery for supplying the wants of civilized communities is paralyzed; and an exceptional emergency exists which demands that the obligations of humanity shall regard no limit of national lines.

The immense debt of civilization to Italy; the warm and steadfast friendship between that country and our own; the affection for their native land felt by great numbers of good American citizens who are immigrants from Italy; the abundance with which God has blessed us in our safety; all these should prompt us to immediate and effective relief.

Private generosity is responding nobly to the demand by contributions through the safe and efficient channel of the American Red Cross Society.

Confident of your approval I have ordered the Government supply ships Celtic and Culgoa to the scene of disaster where upon receiving the authority which I now ask from you they will be able to dispense food, clothing and other supplies with which they are laden to the value of about $300,000. The Celtic has already sailed and the Culgoa is at Port Said. Eight vessels of the returning battle-ship fleet are already under orders for Italian waters and that Government has been asked if their services can be made useful.

I recommend that the Congress approve the application of supplies above indicated and further appropriate the sum of $500,000 to be applied to the work of relief at the discretion of the Executive and with the consent of the Italian Government.

I suggest that the law follow the form of that passed after the Mount Pelée disaster in 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 4, 1909.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask unanimous consent of the House for the immediate passage of the bill for the relief of citizens of Italy, which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

A bill (H. R. 24832) for the relief of citizens of Italy.

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the President of the United States to procure and distribute among the suffering and destitute people of Italy such provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessary articles, and to take such other steps as he shall deem advisable for the purpose of rescuing and succoring the people who are in peril and threatened with starvation the sum of $800,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

In the execution of this act the President is requested to ask and obtain the approval of the Italian Government, and he is hereby authorized to employ any vessels of the United States Navy and to charter and employ any other suitable steamship or vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the President's message will be placed upon the files of the House. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

EXPRESSION OF SORROW.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 462.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the great disaster caused by the recent earthquake in Sicily and adjacent southern Italy and is deeply stirred with pity for the unfortunate sufferers; and further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be delivered to the President of the United States with the request that he communicate the same to the people of Italy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

SECRET SERVICE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I have received the resolution of the House of Representatives of December 17, 1908, running as follows:

"Whereas there was contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed Congress at its last session and became a law, a provision in reference to the employment of the Secret Service in the Treasury Department; and

"Whereas in the last annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress it was stated in reference to that provision: 'It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes,' and it was further stated, 'The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men,' and it was further stated: 'But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law, prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating Members of Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government; and

"Whereas the plain meaning of the above words is that the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by secret service men and that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question; and

"Whereas your committee appointed to consider these statements of the President and to report to the House can not find in the hearings before committees nor in the records of the House or Senate, any justification of this impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress; and

"Whereas your committee would prefer in order to make an intelligent and comprehensive report, just to the President as well as to the Congress, to have all the information which the President may have to communicate: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the House any evidence upon which he based his statements that the 'chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men,' and also to transmit to the House any evidence connecting any Member of the House of Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress with corrupt action in his official capacity, and to inform the House whether he has instituted proceedings for the punishment of any such individual by the courts or has reported any such alleged delinquencies to the House of Representatives."

I am wholly at a loss to understand the concluding portion of the resolution. I have made no charges of corruption against Congress nor against any Member of the present House. If I had proof of such corruption affecting any Member of the House in any matter as to which the Federal Government has jurisdiction, action would at once be brought, as was done in the cases of Senators Mitchell and Burton, and Representatives Williamson, Hermann, and Driggs, at different times since I have been President. This would simply be doing my duty in the execution and enforcement of the laws without respect to persons. But I do not regard it as within the province or the duties of the President to report to the House "alleged delinquencies" of Members, or the supposed "corrupt action" of a Member "in his official capacity." The membership of the House is by the Constitution placed within the power of the House alone. In the prosecution of criminals and the enforcement of the laws the President must resort to the courts of the United States.

In the third and fourth clauses of the preamble it is stated that the meaning of my words is that "the majority of the Congressmen are in fear of being investigated by secret service men" and that "Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question," and that this is an impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress. These statements are not I think in accordance with the facts. The portion of my message referred to runs as follows:

"Last year an amendment was incorporated in the measure provided for the Secret Service, which provided that there should be no detail from the Secret Service and no transfer therefrom. It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes. If deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime it could not have been better devised to this end. It forbade the practices that had been followed to a greater or less extent by the executive heads of various departments for twenty years. To these practices we owe the securing of the evidence which enabled us to drive great lotteries out of business and secure a quarter of a million of dollars in fines from their promoters. These practices have enabled us to discover some of the most outrageous frauds in connection with the theft of government land and government timber by great corporations and by individuals. These practices have enabled us to get some of the evidence indispensable in order to secure the conviction of the wealthiest and most formidable criminals with whom the Government has to deal, both those operating in violation of the anti-trust law and others. The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to these criminals, and it seriously hampers the Government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. Moreover, it not only affects departments outside of the Treasury, but it tends to hamper the Secretary of the Treasury himself in the effort to utilize the employees of his department so as to best meet the requirements of the public service. It forbids him from preventing frauds upon the customs service, from investigating irregularities in branch mints and assay offices, and has seriously crippled him. It prevents the promotion of employees in the Secret Service, and this further discourages good effort. In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, of the wrongdoer.

"The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by Secret Service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past; but it is true that the work of the secret service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a Senator and a Congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating Members of the Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government."

A careful reading of this message will show that I said nothing to warrant the statement that "the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret service men," or "that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive." I did not make any such statement in this message. Moreover I have never made any such statement about Congress as a whole, nor, with a few inevitable exceptions, about the members of Congress, in any message or article or speech. On the contrary I have always not only deprecated but vigorously resented the practice of indiscriminate attack upon Congress, and indiscriminate condemnation of all Congressmen, wise and unwise, fit and unfit, good and bad alike. No one realizes more than I the importance of cooperation between the Executive and Congress, and no one holds the authority and dignity of the Congress of the United States in higher respect than I do. I have not the slightest sympathy with the practice of judging men, for good or for ill, not on their several merits, but in a mass, as members of one particular body or one caste. To put together all men holding or who have held a particular office, whether it be the office of President, or Judge, or Senator, or Member of the House of Representatives, and to class them all, without regard to their individual differences, as good or bad, seems to me utterly indefensible; and it is equally indefensible whether the good are confounded with the bad in a heated and unwarranted championship of all, or in a heated and unwarranted assault upon all. I would neither attack nor defend all executive officers in a mass, whether Presidents, Governors, Cabinet officers, or officials of lower rank; nor would I attack or defend all legislative officers in a mass. The safety of free government rests very largely in the ability of the plain, everyday citizen to discriminate between those public servants who serve him well and those public servants who serve him ill. He can not thus discriminate if he is persuaded to pass judgment upon a man, not with reference to whether he is a fit or unfit public servant, but with reference to whether he is an executive or legislative officer, whether he belongs to one branch or the other of the Government.

This allegation in the resolution, therefore, must certainly be due to an entire failure to understand my message.

The resolution continues: "That the President be requested to transmit to the House any evidence upon which he based his statements that 'the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.'" This statement, which was an attack upon no one, still less upon the Congress, is sustained by the facts.

If you will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 1 last, pages 5553 to 5560, inclusive, you will find the debate on this subject. Mr. TAWNEY of Minnesota, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. SHERLEY of Kentucky, and Mr. FITZGERALD of New York, appear in this debate as the special champions of the provision referred to. Messrs. PARSONS, BENNET, and DRISCOLL were the leaders of those who opposed the adoption of the amendment and upheld the right of the Government to use the most efficient means possible in order to detect criminals and to prevent and punish crime. The amendment was carried in the Committee of the Whole, where no votes of the individual members are recorded, so I am unable to discriminate by mentioning the members who voted for and the members who voted against the provision, but its passage, the Journal records, was greeted with applause. I am well aware, however, that in any case of this kind many Members who have no particular knowledge of the point at issue, are content simply to follow the lead of the committee which had considered the matter, and I have no doubt that many Members of the House simply followed the lead of Messrs. TAWNEY and SMITH, without having had the opportunity to know very much as to the rights and wrongs of the question.

I would not ordinarily attempt in this way to discriminate between members of the House, but as objection has been taken to my language, in which I simply spoke of the action of the House as a whole, and as apparently there is a desire that I should thus discriminate, I will state that I think the responsibility rested on the Committee on Appropriations, under the lead of the members whom I have mentioned.

Now as to the request of the Congress that I give the evidence for my statement that the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men.

The part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to which I have referred above entirely supports this statement. Two distinct lines of argument were followed in the debate. One concerned the question whether the law warranted the employment of the secret service in departments other than the Treasury, and this did not touch the merits of the service in the least. The other line of argument went to the merits of the service, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and here the chief if not the only argument used was that the service should be cut down and restricted because its members had "shadowed" or investigated members of Congress and other officers of the Government. If we examine the debate in detail it appears that most of what was urged in favor of the amendment took the form of the simple statement that the committee held that there had been a "violation of law" by the use of the Secret Service for other purposes than suppressing counterfeiting (and one or two other matters which can be disregarded), and that such language was now to be used as would effectually prevent all such "violation of law" hereafter. Mr. TAWNEY, for instance, says: "It was for the purpose of stopping the use of this service in every possible way by the departments of the Government that this provision was inserted;" and Mr. SMITH says: "Now, that was the only way in which any limitation could be put upon the activities of the Secret Service." Mr. FITZGERALD followed in the same vein, and by far the largest part of the argument against the employment of the Secret Service was confined to the statement that it was in "violation of law." Of course such a statement is not in any way an argument in favor of the justice of the provision. It is not an argument for the provision at all. It is simply a statement of what the gentlemen making it conceive to have been the law. There was both by implication and direct statement the assertion that it was the law, and ought to be the law, that the Secret Service should only be used to suppress counterfeiting; and that the law should be made more rigid than ever in this respect.

Incidentally I may say that in my judgment there is ample legal authority for the statement that this appropriation law to which reference was made imposes no restrictions whatever upon the use of the secret service men, but relates solely to the expenditure of the money appropriated. Mr. TAWNEY in the debate stated that he had in his possession "a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury received a few days ago" in which the Secretary of the Treasury "himself admits that the provisions under which the appropriation has been made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own Department." I append herewith as Appendix A the letter referred to. It makes no such admission as that which Mr. TAWNEY alleges. It contains on the contrary, as you will see by reading it, an "emphatic protest against any such abridgment of the rights delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury by existing law," and concludes by asserting that he "is quite within his rights in thus employing the service of these agents" and that the proposed modification which Mr. TAWNEY succeeded in carrying through would be "distinctly to the advantage of violators of criminal statutes of the United States." I call attention to the fact that in this letter of Secretary Cortelyou to Mr. TAWNEY, as in my letter to the Speaker quoted below, the explicit statement is made that the proposed change will be for the benefit of the criminals, a statement which I simply reiterated in public form in my message to the Congress this year, and which is also contained in effect in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Congress.

A careful reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will also show that practically the only arguments advanced in favor of the limitation proposed by Mr. TAWNEY's committee, beyond what may be supposed to be contained by implication in certain sentences as to "abuses" which were not specified, were those contained in the repeated statements of Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. SHERLEY stated that there had been "pronounced abuses growing out of the use of the Secret Service for purposes other than those intended," putting his statement in the form of a question, and in the same form further stated that the "private conduct" of "Members of Congress, Senators," and others ought not to be investigated by the Secret Service, and that they should not investigate a "Member of Congress" who had been accused of "conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a Member of Congress." In addition to these assertions couched as questions, he made one positive declaration, that "This Secret Service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a Member of Congress." This argument of Mr. SHERLEY, the only real argument as to the merits of the question made on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, will be found in columns 1 and 2 of page 5556, and column 1 of page 5557 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In column 1 of page 5556 Mr. SHERLEY refers to the impropriety of permitting the secret service men to investigate men in the departments, officers of the army and navy, and Senators and Congressmen; in column 2 he refers to officers of the navy and Members of Congress; in column 1, page 5557, he refers only to Members of Congress. His speech puts most weight on the investigation of Members of Congress.

What appears in the record is filled out and explained by an article which appeared in the Chicago Inter-Ocean of January 3, 1904, under a Washington headline, and which marked the beginning of this agitation against the Secret Service. It was a special article of about 3,000 words, written, as I was then informed and now understand, by Mr. L. W. Busbey, at that time private secretary to the Speaker of the House. I inclose a copy of certain extracts from the article, marked Appendix B. It contained an utterly unwarranted attack on the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department and its chief. The opening paragraph includes, for instance, statements like the following:

"He (the chief of the division) and his men are desirous of doing the secret detective work for the whole Government and are not particular about drawing the line between the lawmakers and the lawbreakers. They are ready to shadow the former as well as the latter."

Then, after saying that Congress will insist that the men shall only be used to stop counterfeiting, the article goes on:

"Congress does not intend to have a Fouché or any other kind of minister of police to be used by the executive departments against the legislative branch of the Government. It has been so used, and it is suspected that it has been so used recently. * * * The legislative branch of the Government will not tolerate the meddling of detectives, whether they represent the President, Cabinet officers, or only themselves. * * * Congressmen resented the secret interference of the secret service men, who for weeks shadowed some of the most respected members of the House and Senate. * * * When it was discovered that the secret service men were shadowing Congressmen there was a storm of indignation at the capitol and the bureau came near being abolished and the appropriation for the suppression of counterfeiting cut off. * * * At another time the chief of the Secret Service had his men shadow Congressmen with a view to involving them in scandals that would enable the bureau to dictate to them as the price of silence. * * * The secret service men have shown an inclination again to shadow members of Congress, knowing them to be law-makers, and this is no joke. Several of the departments have asked Congress for secret funds for investigation, and the Treasury Department wants the limitation removed from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting. This shows a tendency toward Fouchéism and a secret watch on other officials than themselves."

At the time of this publication the work of the Secret Service, which was thus assailed, included especially the investigation of great land frauds in the West, and the securing of evidence to help the Department of Justice in the beef-trust investigations at Chicago, which resulted in successful prosecutions.

In view of Mr. Busbey's position, I have accepted the above quoted statements as fairly expressing the real meaning and animus of the attacks made in general terms on the use of the Secret Service for the punishment of criminals. Furthermore, in the performance of my duty, to endeavor to find the feelings of Congressmen on public questions of note, I have frequently discussed this particular matter with Members of Congress; and on such occasions the reasons alleged to me for the hostility of Congress to the Secret Service, both by those who did and by those who did not share this hostility, were almost invariably the same as those set forth in Mr. Busbey's article. I may add, by the way, that these allegations as to the Secret Service are wholly without foundation in fact.

But all of this is of insignificant importance compared with the main, the real issue. This issue is simply, Does Congress desire that the Government shall have at its disposal the most efficient instrument for the detection of criminals and the prevention and punishment of crime, or does it not? The action of the House last May was emphatically an action against the interest of justice and against the interest of law-abiding people, and in its effect of benefit only to lawbreakers. I am not now dealing with motives; whatever may have been the motive that induced the action of which I speak, this was beyond all question the effect of that action. Is the House now willing to remedy the wrong?

For a long time I contented myself with endeavoring to persuade the House not to permit the wrong, speaking informally on the subject with those Members who, I believed, knew anything of the matter, and communicating officially only in the ordinary channels, as through the Secretary of the Treasury. In a letter to the Speaker on April 30, protesting against the cutting down of the appropriation vitally necessary if the Interstate Commerce Commission was to carry into effect the twentieth section of the Hepburn law, I added: "The provision about the employment of the secret service men will work very great damage to the Government in its endeavor to prevent and punish crime. There is no more foolish outcry than this against 'spies;' only criminals need fear our detectives." (I inclose copy of the whole letter, marked "Appendix C." The postscript is blurred in my copybook, and two or three of the words can not be deciphered.) These methods proved unavailing to prevent the wrong. Messrs. Tawney and Smith, and their fellow members on the Appropriations Committee paid no heed to the protests; and as the obnoxious provision was incorporated in the sundry civil bill, it was impossible for me to consider or discuss it on its merits, as I should have done had it been in a separate bill. Therefore I have now taken the only method available, that of discussing it in my message to Congress; and as all efforts to secure what I regard as proper treatment of the subject without recourse to plain speaking had failed, I have spoken plainly and directly, and have set forth the facts in explicit terms.

Since 1901 the investigations covered by the Secret Service Division—under the practice which had been for many years recognized as proper and legitimate, and which had received the sanction of the highest law officers of the Government—have covered a wide range of offenses against the federal law. By far the most important of these related to the public domain, as to which there was uncovered a far-reaching and widespread system of fraudulent transactions involving both the illegal acquisition and the illegal fencing of Government land; and, in connection with both these offenses, the crimes of perjury and subornation of perjury. Some of the persons involved in these violations were of great wealth and of wide political and social influence. Both their corporate associations and their political affiliations, and the lawless character of some of their employees, made the investigations not only difficult but dangerous. In Colorado one of the secret service men was assassinated. In Nebraska it was necessary to remove a United States attorney and a United States marshal before satisfactory progress could be made in the prosecution of the offenders.

The evidence in all these cases was chiefly secured by men trained in the Secret Service and detailed to the Department of Justice at the request of that Department and of the Department of the Interior. In the State of Nebraska alone sixty defendants were indicted; and of the thirty-two cases thus far brought to trial twenty-eight have resulted in conviction; two of the principals, Messrs. Comstock and Richards, men of wealth and wide influence, being sentenced to twelve months in jail and fined $1,500 each. The following secret service memorandum made in the course of a pending case illustrates the ramifications of interest with which the Government has to deal:

"Charles T. Stewart, of Council Bluffs, was indicted at Omaha for conspiracy to defraud the Government of the title to public lands in McPherson County, Nebr.; also indicted for maintaining an unlawful inclosure of the public lands, and also under indictment for perjury in connection with final proof submitted by him on lands filed on by him as a homestead. In his final proof he swore that he and his family had resided on the lands in McPherson County (which are within his unlawful inclosure), when as a matter of fact his family has at all times resided in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He is engaged in the wholesale grocery business, his store being located in Omaha, in the wholesale district there. He is reputed to be quite wealthy. Stewart's attorneys are Harl & Tinley, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who are also the attorneys at that place for the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Railway Company, in which company Harl holds considerable stock, Stewart being also a stockholder and possibly a director of the company. He is also represented in Omaha by W. J. Connell, one of the attorneys there for the same company. Stewart is also represented in his perjury case by 'Bill' Gurley, of Omaha, Nebr., who at one time was quite closely connected in a political way with the U. P. R. R. Company; Stewart is also closely associated with C. B. Hazleton, postmaster at Council Bluffs. Harl & Tinley and Hazleton are all members of the same lodge. Another close personal friend of Stewart's is Ed. Hart, alias 'Waterworks' Hart, president of the Council Bluffs Water Company, and interested in the street railway. Stewart's father was interested in, and practically owned and controlled, during his lifetime, a large ranch along the U. P. R. R. in Nebraska, and did a great deal of business with that road."

Concerning this case the United States attorney at Omaha states: "There are three cases against Stewart, one for fencing, one conspiracy, one perjury, all good cases and chances of conviction good."

In connection with the Nebraska prosecution the Government has by decree secured the return to the Government of over a million acres of grazing land; in Colorado of more than 2,000 acres of mineral land, and suits are now pending involving 150,000 acres more.

All these investigations in the land cases were undertaken in consequence of Mr. Hitchcock, the then Secretary of the Interior, becoming convinced that there were extensive frauds committed in his department; and the ramifications of the frauds were so far-reaching that he was afraid to trust his own officials to deal in thoroughgoing fashion with them. One of the secret service men accordingly resigned and was appointed in the Interior Department to carry on this work. The first thing he discovered was that the special agents' division or corps of detectives of the Land Office of the Interior Department was largely under the control of the land thieves; and in consequence the investigations above referred to had to be made by secret service men.

If the present law, for which Messrs. TAWNEY, SMITH, and the other gentlemen I have above mentioned are responsible, had then been in effect, this action would have been impossible, and most of the criminals would unquestionably have escaped. No more striking instance can be imagined of the desirability of having a central corps of skilled investigating agents who can at any time be assigned, if necessary in large numbers, to investigate some violation of the Federal statutes, in no matter what branch of the public service. In this particular case most of the men investigated who were public servants were in the executive branch of the Government. But in Oregon, where an enormous acreage of fraudulently alienated public land was recovered for the Government, a United States Senator, Mr. Mitchell, and a Member of the lower House, Mr. Williamson, were convicted on evidence obtained by men transferred from the Secret Service, and another Member of Congress was indicted.

From 1901 to 1904 a successful investigation of naturalization affairs was made by the Secret Service, with the result of obtaining hundreds of convictions of conspirators who were convicted of selling fraudulent papers of naturalization. (Subsequently, Congress passed a very wise law providing a special service and appropriation for the prevention of naturalization frauds; but unfortunately, at the same time that the action against the Secret Service was taken, Congress also cut down the appropriation for this special service, with the result of crippling the effort to stop frauds in naturalization.) The fugitives Greene and Gaynor, implicated in a peculiarly big Government contract fraud, were located and arrested in Canada by the Secret Service, and thanks to this they have since gone to prison for their crimes.

The Secret Service was used to assist in the investigation of crimes under the peonage laws, and owing partly thereto numerous convictions were secured and the objectionable practice was practically stamped out, at least in many districts. The most extensive smuggling of silk and opium in the history of the Treasury Department was investigated by agents of the Secret Service in New York and Seattle and a successful prosecution of the offenders undertaken. Assistance of the utmost value was rendered to the Department of Justice in the beef-trust investigation at Chicago, prosecutions were followed up and fines inflicted. The cotton-leak scandal in the Agricultural Department was investigated and the responsible parties located. What was done in connection with lottery investigations is disclosed in a letter just sent to me by the United States attorney for Delaware, running as follows:

"The destruction of the Honduras National Lottery Company, successor to the Louisiana Lottery Company, was entirely the work of the Secret Service. * * * This excellent work was accomplished by Mr. Wilkie and his subordinates. I thought it might be timely to recall this prosecution."

Three hundred thousand dollars in fines were collected by the Government in the lottery cases. Again, the ink contract fraud in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (a bureau of the Treasury Department) was investigated by the Secret Service and the guilty parties brought to justice. Mr. TAWNEY stated in the debate that this was not investigated by the Secret Service but by a clerk "down there," conveying the impression that the clerk was not in the Secret Service. As a matter of fact, he was in the Secret Service; his name was Moran, and he was promoted to assistant chief for the excellence of his work in this case. The total expense for the office and field force of the Secret Service last year was $135,000; and by this one investigation they saved to the Government over $100,000 a year. Thanks to the restriction imposed by Congress it is now very difficult for the Secretary of the Treasury to use the Secret Service freely even in his own department; for instance, to use them to repeat what they did so admirably in the case of this ink contract. The Government is further crippled by the law forbidding it to employ detective agencies. Of course the Government can detect the most dangerous crimes, and punish the worst criminals, only by the use, either of the Secret Service or of private detectives; to hamper it in using the one, and forbid it to resort to the other, can inure to the benefit of none save the criminals.

The facts above given show beyond possibility of doubt that what the Secretary of the Treasury and I had both written prior to the enactment of the obnoxious provision, and what I have since written in my message to the Congress, state the facts exactly as they are. The obnoxious provision is of benefit only to the criminal class and can be of benefit only to the criminal class. If it had been embodied in the law at the time when I became President all the prosecutions above mentioned, and many others of the same general type, would either not have been undertaken or would have been undertaken with the Government at a great disadvantage; and many, and probably most, of the chief offenders would have gone scot-free instead of being punished for their crimes.

Such a body as the Secret Service, such a body of trained investigating agents, occupying a permanent position in the Government service, and separate from local investigating forces in different Departments, is an absolute necessity if the best work is to be done against criminals. It is by far the most efficient instrument possible to use against crime. Of course the more efficient an instrument is, the more dangerous it is if misused. To the argument that a force like this can be misused it is only necessary to answer that the condition of its usefulness if handled properly is that it shall be so efficient as to be dangerous if handled improperly. Any instance of abuse by the Secret Service or other investigating force in the Departments should be unsparingly punished; and Congress should hold itself ready at any and all times to investigate the executive departments whenever there is reason to believe that any such instance of abuse has occurred. I wish to emphasize my more than cordial acquiescence in the view that this is not only the right of Congress, but emphatically its duty. To use the Secret Service in the investigation of purely private or political matters would be a gross abuse. But there has been no single instance of such abuse during my term as President.

In conclusion, I most earnestly ask, in the name of good government and decent administration, in the name of honesty and for the purpose of bringing to justice violators of the federal laws wherever they may be found, whether in public or private life, that the action taken by the House last year be reversed. When this action was taken, the Senate committee, under the lead of the late Senator Allison, having before it a strongly-worded protest (Appendix D) from Secretary Cortelyou like that he had sent to Mr. TAWNEY, accepted the Secretary's views; and the Senate passed the bill in the shape presented by Senator Allison. In the conference, however, the House conferees insisted on the retention of the provision they had inserted, and the Senate yielded.

The Chief of the Secret Service is paid a salary utterly inadequate to the importance of his functions and to the admirable way in which he has performed them. I earnestly urge that it be increased to $6,000 per annum. I also urge that the Secret Service be placed where it properly belongs, and made a bureau in the Department of Justice, as the Chief of the Secret Service has repeatedly requested; but whether this is done or not, it should be explicitly provided that the Secret Service can be used to detect and punish crime wherever it is found.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 4, 1909.

APPENDIX A.

APRIL 29, 1908.

To the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In a bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government (H. R. 21260) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, I find on page 29, line 16, as a part of the section making the appropriations for "Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes," the following language:

"No person employed in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or under the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes who is detailed, furloughed, granted leave of absence, dismissed, or otherwise temporarily or finally separated from the service of such division and is thereafter employed under any other branch of the public service shall be restored or paid compensation for services or expenses in the Secret Service Division for two years after the termination of his employment under such other branch of the Government."

I now call your attention to section 166 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

"Each head of a department may from time to time alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his department of the clerks allowed by law as he may find it necessary and proper to do."

The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is a division of the Secretary's office, and the employees of that division are paid under the authority of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill as persons in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, but the paragraph which it is proposed to incorporate in the sundry civil bill of this year makes it quite doubtful whether, under the terms of this act, I am permitted to detail these employees, including the chief and the assistant chief of the division, to any other branch under my jurisdiction. As this would be in direct conflict with section 166 of the Revised Statutes and would seriously obstruct the proper conduct of the affairs of the department for which I am held responsible, I wish to convey to you my respectful, but none the less emphatic, protest against any such abridgment of the rights delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury by existing law.

During the forty-three years that the Secret Service Division has existed in the Treasury Department, and more particularly within the last twenty years, it has been considered by the Secretary of the Treasury as one of the most essential and helpful divisions of his office. Prior to the organization of the Department of Commerce and Labor the field of activity covered by the Treasury Department was enormous, with important interests of a complex and diversified character, intimately related to the public welfare in almost every branch of national activity and usefulness.

It then had jurisdiction over the Immigration Service and the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act. It then had, and still has, those great industrial plants, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mints of the United States, as well as assay offices established for the convenience of the public. It has thousands of employees handling money and precious metals, and like every other large employer, finds that its confidence is sometimes abused by dishonest employees.

In all offenses of this character the Secretary of the Treasury has called upon the Secret Service Division for an investigation, and inasmuch as the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting is available for no other purpose, the expense of these investigations has been charged against the contingent or other available funds of the bureaus in which the offense has been committed. These investigations have covered a wide range, but, in order that you may understand the character of work which the Secretary of the Treasury has heretofore accomplished under the authority of section 166 of the Revised Statutes, I will refer only to a few concrete instances of this description:

"An investigation of the ink contracts of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing a few months ago disclosed what appeared to be a conspiracy between the ink expert of the bureau and a certain manufacturer of inks by which the Government was paying four times the legitimate price for its black ink. The result of this investigation was the indictment of the ink expert and the manufacturer and a new contract upon a more nearly legitimate basis with a resultant saving to the Governmnt of fully $100,000 a year.

"In the Customs Service the Secret Service Division has been utilized to great advantage in cases where the customs agents were handicapped by being too well known. At Seattle a secret-service agent broke up an opium smuggling gang that had been operating for years in defiance of law and made the largest seizure of opium, one ton, recorded in the department and convicted the smugglers.

"In the Rosenthal silk frauds in New York the Secret Service Division was of great assistance, securing the evidence upon which a silk examiner in the appraiser's stores was convicted, and Rosenthal, the principal offender, was indicted and is still a fugitive from justice.

"The assay office at Seattle, Wash., was the subject of complaint on the part of depositors of gold dust that their returns in that office showed a larger percentage of loss in refining than at other points on the Pacific coast. An investigation, made jointly by the superintendent of the San Francisco mint and secret-service agents disclosed systematic thefts by a trusted employee, who was subsequently indicted, tried, and convicted for the offense. The thefts in this case had aggregated more than $100,000, and approximately $40,000 was recovered by the secret-service agents.

"On the occasion of the annual examination and physical count of the contents of the mint at San Francisco a shortage of $30,000 in double eagles was disclosed, there being six empty pigeon holes each of which should have contained a $5,000 sack. This was investigated by secret service agents, and the chief clerk, a former cashier of the mint, was convicted of the crime and sent to the penitentiary.

"A few years earlier an investigation conducted by the employees of the Secret Service Division disclosed the systematic looting of the assay office at Carson City, Nev., and the assayer and an assistant were convicted of having abstracted approximately $80,000 of the Government's gold.

"Still earlier there were extensive thefts from the mint at Philadelphia, where gold bars were being carried away. Agents of the Secret Service Division made an investigation, which resulted in the conviction of the superintendent and the recovery of practically all of the stolen property.

"In the Marine-Hospital Service, a branch of the Treasury Department, a trusted clerk employed duplicate vouchers, by the manipulation of which he was able to collect from the Government nearly $100,000. Secret-service agents exposed his methods and secured his indictment, to which he afterwards pleaded guilty, and was sent to the penitentiary.

"At the time when there were two Comptrollers of the Treasury a chief of a division in the Second Comptroller's office devised an ingenious plan for defrauding the Government through fraudulent 'horse claims'—claims for animals which had been seized and used by military order during the civil war. An investigation by secret-service agents disclosed the character of the fraud through which the Government had already lost $15,000, and in which there were pending nearly $50,000 in illegitimate claims. The offending clerk was tried and convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for twelve years.

"In the office of the Treasurer of the United States, where the mutilated currency is received and counted for redemption, there have been many skillfully devised plans for defrauding the Government, and in that branch of the service alone there have been many investigations and convictions.

"In the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, a branch of the Treasury service, in 1884, secret-service agents conducted an investigation which led to the discovery that claims aggregating $200,000 were fraudulent, because of prior payment, and that amount was saved to the Government. Later, in the same office, secret-service agents disclosed the theft and use of canceled money orders and fixed the responsibility upon an employee who committed suicide rather than face prosecution."

These are but suggestive samples of the varied demands made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon his Secret Service Division in the protection of the interests of both the department and the public. Aside from the general question involved in the proviso, concerning which I have very decided views, but which I shall not express at this time, there should be no question of the authority of the head of this department to use the force of the Secret Service Division for such special investigations as may be necessary in his own department.

I am advised that the Secretary of the Treasury is quite within his rights in thus employing the service of these agents, and the modification of his statutory authority by the proposed restrictive paragraph in this bill is not only a discrimination against him as the head of an executive department, but distinctly to the advantage of violators of criminal statutes of the United States.

Respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary.

APPENDIX B.

[Chicago Inter Ocean, January 3, 1904.]

WILKIE WOULD BE THE FOUCHÉ OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Special correspondence of the Inter Ocean.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 31.

John E. Wilkie is suspected of an ambition to become the Fouché of the United States. Mr. Wilkie is Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury Department and his official duties are to run down counterfeiters. He and his men are, however, desirous of doing the secret detective work for the whole Government, and are not particular about drawing the line between lawmakers and lawbreakers. They are ready to shadow the former as well as the latter. That is why Chief Wilkie is suspected of an ambition to rival the notorious Fouché of the First Napoleon.

This weakness of the secret service men to break over the bounds of the law relating to counterfeiting and become general sleuths in their search for wrongdoers is not a new one. The bureau has had that weakness for many years, or ever since it was organized, and it has had to be curbed time and again, as it has meddled in affairs over which it has no jurisdiction and been threatened with extinction.

There is no desire for a general detective service or national police organization in connection with the Federal Government. On the contrary, there is in Congress an utter abhorrence of such a scheme, because it savors of imperialism more than any other assumption of power by the executive departments.

It is considered absolutely contradictory to the democratic principles of government. But the detective mind does not seem able to grasp such fine distinctions. A detective recognizes no limitations on his peculiar powers of ferreting out crime, or what appears as crime to him. He is as ready to shadow a King or a President as he is a poor counterfeiter or a tramp. The bigger the subject the greater the game, and the more intense the excitement.

Congress never has had any sympathy with the Secret Service Bureau. That bureau is not the creature of congressional action. It is only the child of administrative routine in the Treasury Department. The law against counterfeiting is one of the earliest placed on the statute books. It was passed in the beginning of the Government, and Congress has ever since made annual appropriations for the suppression of counterfeiting. Twenty years ago it was found that the Treasury Department had created a number of small bureaus not known to the law as a convenient means of enforcing the laws applying to that department or for the purpose of creating places for the friends of the Secretary. These official bureaus were illegal, but they were claimed to be necessary. They were utterly repugnant to the spirit of civil service reform, and to remedy the evil Congress recognized them by making specific appropriations for them. In this way was the Secret Service Bureau and its chief given an official status, though never created by act of Congress.

TO STOP COUNTERFEITING.

The appropriation for the maintenance of the bureau is now $16,500 a year, and Congress in addition to this makes an appropriation of $125,000 a year for the suppression of counterfeiting, but stipulates that the appropriation shall be used for no other purpose whatever. The stipulation was necessary to prevent the use of the money in shadowing every conceivable crime that can be suggested by the detective mind, and for that reason it is repugnant to Mr. Wilkie and his subordinates, and also, perhaps, to the Secretary of the Treasury and other Cabinet officers who sympathize with the shadowing business. The Treasury Department has appealed in vain to have Congress drop the limitation from the appropriation. It is appealing to this Congress, but its appeal will be ignored.

The limitation will remain, because Congress does not intend to have a Fouché or any other kind of minister of police to be used by the executive departments against the legislative branch of the Government. It has been so used, and it is suspected that it has been so used recently. The Secret Service has been very active generally, and not so active against counterfeiters as in the old days, when the appropriation was less than half what it is now.

The notorious Brockway, king of counterfeiters, was run down years ago, and there has not been an important capture of any counterfeiting outfit in the last half dozen years. The secret service men have been busy protecting the President, investigating frauds against naturalization, hunting down anarchists, shadowing men suspected of stealing the public lands, and other matters, which may be very important, but absolutely out of the line of duty of the Secret Service Bureau.

The post-office investigation has inspired other departments to go into the same business, and the Secret Service Bureau feels that its detective business is becoming invaded. The reputation made by Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow as the great sleuth of the times has aroused Chief Wilkie's men to look to their laurels. They desire to run down all the rascals in the government service and show that they are the real and only thief catchers in the country.

They want Wilkie to be the Fouché of the United States, and they want recognition as the national detectives, licensed to shadow every man, whatever his station, whom they may suspect of any crime. That is just what Congress will not tolerate, and Congress is the lawmaking power which creates and abolishes offices. The legislative branch of the Government will not tolerate the meddling of detectives, whether they represent the President, Cabinet officers, or only themselves.

There will be no Fouché in Washington, because Fouché was used by Napoleon to intimidate everybody else in the French Empire, and grew so powerful that he intimidated the Emperor himself by reason of the state secrets he held.

WILKIE NOT THE FIRST.

Chief Wilkie is not the first man at the head of the Secret Service who wanted the power of a Fouché. Twenty years ago the Secret Service became a scandal in Washington through its presumption. Its detectives assumed the right to shadow Congressmen and find out how an amendment agreed to in conference failed to appear in the bill as it was sent to the President.

The failure to incorporate the amendment in the enrolled bill was suspicious of jobbery, and it was investigated by Congress, but Congress resented the secret interference of the secret service men, who for weeks shadowed some of the most respected members of the House and Senate in an effort to convict them of having guilty knowledge of how the amendment failed. When it was discovered that the secret service men were shadowing Congressmen there was a storm of indignation at the Capitol and the bureau came near being abolished and the appropriation for the suppression of counterfeiting cut off. The result was the incorporation of the limitation that none of the appropriation should be used for any other purpose than that of detecting and punishing counterfeiting.

At another time the chief of the Secret Service had his men shadow Congressmen with a view of involving them in scandals that would enable the bureau to dictate to them as the price of silence. It was the old detective blackmailing trick, and again came near to the abolition of the bureau. * * *

* * * * * * *

The secret-service men have shown an inclination again to shadow Members of Congress, knowing them to be lawmakers, and this is no joke. Several of the departments have asked Congress for secret funds for investigation and the Treasury Department wants the limit removed from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting. This shows a tendency toward Fouchéism and a secret watch on other officials than themselves.

As the highest power in the Government, that of making laws and appropriating public funds, Congress will not grant any such extension of secret-service operations, but will this year, probably, make the restrictions on the Secret Service more severe than in the past, and also demand an accounting to show how the appropriation of $125,000 for suppressing counterfeiting has been used, whether any of it has been used to build up a general secret-service system and create a Fouché in the Federal Government.

APPENDIX C.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is one matter connected with the sundry civil bill to which I should call your special attention, and that is, the cutting down of the appropriation asked for by the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry into effect the twentieth section of the Hepburn law to only $50,000. In accordance with the request of the Committee on Appropriations in carrying out the desire of the leaders of the House, the Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of asking as they originally asked for $500,000, which was the amount necessary in order to do the best work in carrying out the twentieth section, cut down the request to $350,000, the very minimum under which the work can be done effectively at all.

To provide only $50,000 really amounts to making a sham appropriation. It would be better to repeal the twentieth section or suspend its operation for a year, for such a course would have the merit of frankness. I regard this twentieth section as containing one of the most important provisions of the Hepburn Act, and to refuse to provide means for carrying it on is equivalent to repealing for this year that section, and it would undoubtedly be so understood by the country at large. I feel that the Hepburn Act was one of the great pieces of legislation for which Congress, under your direction and guidance, has been responsible, and for which it has received such deserved credit.

It would be from every standpoint a very real misfortune now to nullify one of the important provisions of that act. The only people benefited would be the very worst of the big railroad men whose misdeeds we are trying to prevent or correct. The commission has been at work with the railroads for two years preparing to put this section into execution through the means of a board of examiners. To refuse to give them $350,000 (for to appropriate $50,000 serves no purpose whatever) is to nullify completely these two years' work.

Very sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

P. S.—I may also add that if carried into effect, the proposal in the bill limiting the wages on the Panama Canal may completely upset the admirable work now being done thereon; and of course the provision about the employment of the secret-service men will work very great damage to the Government in its endeavor to prevent and punish crime. There is no more foolish outcry than this against "spies;" only criminals need fear our detectives.

APPENDIX D.

MAY 5, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: While the sundry civil bill (H. R. 21260) was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the following amendment was adopted to the paragraph making the appropriation for "Suppressing counterfeiting:"

"No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed in or under said Secret Service Division."

Among other funds appropriated by the sundry civil act, to which this amendment would apply, is one for the collection of revenue from customs and for the prevention and detection of frauds on customs, both of which are under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Section 166 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"Each head of a department may from time to time alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his department of the clerks allowed by law as he may find it necessary and proper to do."

Under the authority granted by this section the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time has detailed men from the Secret Service Division to detect frauds upon the customs, and their expenses while so engaged have been paid from the appropriation for this purpose. Under the amendment to which I have referred above, it would appear that I am prohibited from making such details and from paying the men so detailed from any appropriation under the sundry civil act.

This would seem to be an abridgment of the right extended to the Secretary of the Treasury by section 166, and a discrimination against the Secretary of the Treasury which is distinctly in favor of the violator of the federal statutes, inasmuch as it restricts the Secretary in using every possible force to combat frauds upon the customs.

But this is only one phase of a matter which seems to me to be of vast and far-reaching public importance. The Secret Service Division has been a valuable branch of this office for many years. Its field force is composed of investigating officers of the highest skill, men familiar with all of the tricks and subterfuges of high-grade criminals, and whose integrity and devotion to the Government's interests have never been successfully assailed.

Their peculiar fitness for criminal investigations requiring the highest order of intelligence has commended them to the heads of other departments, and from time to time for many years the Secretary of the Treasury has received requests from the heads of other departments who wished to avail themselves of the services of these agents.

The appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting provides that the money shall be used for that purpose and for no other except the protection of the President. The field agents of the Secret Service Division who are paid out of this appropriation are per diem employees, and it has been considered that there would be no impropriety in discontinuing the services of these men in the work of suppressing counterfeiting, stopping their per diem payment from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting—practically placing them upon leave of absence without pay—and while so detached and separated, allowing them to be employed by another department, say under the Attorney-General, for the investigation of specific violations of the criminal statutes of the United States.

While thus employed they have been designated as "special employees" of the Department of Justice and have received compensation (equal to that which they were receiving in the Secret Service Division) from the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses of United States courts" or some other appropriation properly available for their payment. This practice has given the Attorney-General and other heads of departments the services of such agents as might from time to time be required for periods varying from one day to several months, and upon the grounds of economy, efficiency, and convenience has proved extremely satisfactory to every one concerned. It has enabled the Attorney-General to conduct investigations in connection with the violations of the trust laws, of laws relating to the public domain, and to lottery enterprises, with gratifying results.

The Attorney-General is not provided with any permanent investigating force of his own and is barred from the employment of private detective agencies by an act which reads as follows:

"That hereafter no employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, or similar agency, shall be employed in any Government service or by any officer of the District of Columbia. (Supplement to the Revised Statutes, vol. 2; Legislation 1892–1895, p. 121.)"

The requirements of his Department are of so uncertain and varied a nature that at times during the year four or five men can take care of the work, while at other times, in emergencies, twenty-five or thirty may be required for short periods. It would seem to be impracticable to require that he should have to employ these men haphazard, and it is a self-evident proposition that no competent man would be willing to accept employment for a few weeks with no certainty as to how much time might elapse before he would be needed again; and if a permanent force were to be maintained by the Department of Justice it would necessarily have to consist of the maximum number of men that would be needed at any one time, though the records show that there are many periods of the year when only a few men are necessary to conduct the work.

So it has developed that the practice of borrowing men from the Secret Service has been found the best solution of the problem. Within the last two years, during which these temporary employees have been most active in the investigation and prosecution of land frauds, there has developed an opposition to the loaning of these trained investigators to the other departments. It has been asserted that the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting specifically provided that the men employed for suppressing counterfeiting should be employed for no other purpose whatever, and that therefore the loaning of these agents was a direct violation of law. The act for suppressing counterfeiting reads as follows:

"For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction, dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money, and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including one thousand dollars to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, the act of March 2, 1895, and for no other purpose whatever except in the protection of the person of the President of the United States, $115,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for 'Fees of witnesses, United States courts.'"

It seems to me that a careful reading of this act discloses that the phrase "and for no other purpose whatever" applies, and can only apply, to the expenditure of the money and does not and can not apply to a prohibition against employing the agents elsewhere so long as they are not reimbursed from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting.

In order to comply with every possible technical requirement, it recently has been the practice of the department to have these agents resign from the Secret Service Division and receive regular appointments in the department in need of their services for periods sufficiently long to enable them to accomplish the work for which they are required. Not a dollar of the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting is expended for any other purpose, and can not be under this arrangement, but the proposed amendment to the sundry civil act would operate to disqualify an officer who had been trained in the Secret Service Division from giving the benefit of that experience to any other department of the Government under any circumstances, and it is thus sought to confine the work of these skilled men to one particular branch of the government service.

Broadly, this deprives any other department of the services of these men under any conditions and will operate to hamper and embarrass some of them, notably the Department of Justice, in the continuance of current work—pending prosecutions which may not be reached until we shall have entered upon the fiscal year of 1909. Should this proposed amendment become a law, the only gainer would be the wrongdoer, and the Government would be the loser.

I might point out to you that the services of these men are never utilized in seeking possible violations of the Statutes, but are employed for the purpose of obtaining evidence and completing cases where violations of the Federal Statutes are known to exist; in other words, they are assigned to specific cases and are not given roving commissions to go prying about in the hope of disclosing possible infractions of law.

Inasmuch as there is no question as to the efficiency of these men and their value to the prosecuting officer, I can only suggest that if the methods by which their services are now extended to the other Departments are objected to on technical grounds, then, having the public welfare solely in view, some action should be taken by the legislative branch of the Government which will enable the other Departments to obtain the services of these officers as they may be required from time to time.

I can not impress upon you too emphatically my conviction that any modification of the statutory rights accorded to the Secretary of the Treasury by section 166 or any restriction upon the use of these men by other Departments will be wholly and solely of advantage to the enemy of public welfare and government interests.

I append a brief reference to certain matters other than suppressing counterfeiting, some of them in the Treasury Department and others outside of it, in which men detailed or loaned from the Secret Service Division have accomplished results of a satisfactory character and which will indicate to you the broad and varied field of activity in which these men have been and may be employed for the benefit of the Government.

Respectfully, G. B. CORTELYOU, Secretary.

CASES OUTSIDE THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT IN WHICH SECRET SERVICE AGENTS HAVE BEEN EMPLOYED BY OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

A general investigation of naturalization affairs disclosed extensive frauds in New York and Pennsylvania. The chief conspirators, who were selling fraudulent papers, were arrested, their counterfeit court seals and thousands of fraudulent certificates and blank applications were seized and destroyed, and the principals were convicted. Several hundred convictions followed where persons were implicated in obtaining and selling fraudulent papers. This work was practically conducted and concluded by four agents of the Secret Service Division.

The paymaster of the Government medical supply department at San Francisco was robbed of his official check books, perforating machine, rubber stamps, etc., and thousands of dollars were realized by the thief on fraudulent checks. The thief was captured and convicted by agents of the Secret Service Division.

A defaulting national-bank cashier from Newport, Ky., was located, captured, and convicted. Petty thievery at the Philadelphia mint was detected and the thieves convicted. Thefts from the navy-yard at Philadelphia were investigated and the guilty persons punished. Petty officers in the New York Navy-Yard who were accepting bribes to give promotions to favorite applicants were convicted and the practice broken up.

Agents of the Secret Service Division located the fugitives Greene and Gaynor in Canada, secured their arrest and transfer to Montreal from Quebec, and started the proceedings which resulted in their subsequent surrender to the United States, where they were afterwards convicted.

The defaulting cashier of the national bank at Bridgeport, Conn., was traced and followed to Panama, arrested, returned, convicted, and sentenced to ten years. The investigation of crime under the peonage law was commenced in Alabama and Mississippi. Numerous convictions were secured and the objectionable practice was abandoned in many districts. An investigation of the Land Office in the Interior Department was inaugurated with Secretary Hitchcock by agents of this service, disclosing a gigantic conspiracy involving the bribery of government employees and the fraudulent acquisition of public lands. Many prominent persons were implicated in these cases and their indictment and prosecution followed.

The defaulting fugitive president and cashier of a national bank of Cleveland, Ohio, were traced, arrested in British Columbia, returned to Ohio, and convicted. The land fraud investigations were continued in California and Oregon and numerous indictments followed. Thefts of Government property at West Point, Fort Hamilton, and the Presidio were investigated and the thieves detected and convicted. Assistance was rendered the Department of Justice in the beef-trust investigation at Chicago, prosecutions followed, and fines were inflicted in the cases investigated by secret-service agents.

Secret-service agents investigated cases of illegal fencing and the fraudulent acquisition of government land in Nebraska and Wyoming. Hundreds of thousands of acres were restored to the Government and the violators were convicted.

An investigation was started of the various lottery enterprises being conducted in the South and West. When brought to a successful conclusion over $300,000 in fines were collected from the offenders. Government land valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars was recovered under actions in equity based on investigations of agents of the Secret Service Division for the Department of Justice, and criminal proceedings are pending in Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah. The murder of a woman by moonshiners in Virginia was investigated, a conspiracy was disclosed, and all of the conspirators were prosecuted and convicted.

Violations of the internal-revenue laws by prominent distillers in Virginia were investigated by secret service agents and the offenders convicted. Extensive frauds in the construction of the Plaquemine lock at Plaquemine, La., were disclosed by an investigation conducted by an agent of the Secret Service, and the civilian engineer in charge and a number of his assistants, together with the contracting firm, are under indictment.

In addition to the foregoing there have been many cases in which secret service agents have been used to disclose the whereabouts of property concealed by bankrupts and to secure the evidence upon which the offenders have been convicted. In hundreds of cases the Department of Justice has utilized these men for the purpose of locating missing witnesses, fugitives from justice, to investigate the antecedents and character of venire men in important Federal cases where it was essential that the United States attorney should be familiar with the character of the jurors. In many cases where the defendant interests have been unscrupulous and wealthy attempts at jury bribing have been frustrated by secret service agents. Filibustering expeditions against friendly governments have been investigated and broken up and prosecutions in many cases followed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be referred to the special committee appointed to consider certain portions of the President's annual message.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment in order to this motion? Then I move that this message be returned to the President.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion to refer the message of the President to the special committee, which, it seems to me, is the proper action, and the only proper action for the House to take. A resolution was reported from the special committee and adopted by the House, asking for information to be submitted by the President. In answer to that resolution the message has been received, and it seems to me that the message should be referred to the committee upon whose motion the resolution was offered and adopted and with whom it is still a question of what action the House should take with reference to the portion of the President's message that was pointed out.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIGGS. At the request of some of my friends on this side, I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to refer.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the motion to refer to the special committee was agreed to.

The report shows the favorable consideration which has been given to the invitation by the Department of Commerce and Labor and by the Biological Survey and the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, in view of which and in recognition of the liberal part which Austria took in the world's fair at Chicago and the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, the Secretary of State recommends an appropriation by Congress of $250,000 to enable the Government of the United States to accept the invitation to participate in the exhibition.

This recommendation has my cordial approval.

COLORADO BOUNDARY LINE—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, returning without his approval the joint resolution (S. R. 78) establishing a boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico. The message was read to the Senate December 19, 1908, and the question is, Shall the joint resolution pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the joint resolution simply recognizes the line the Department of the Interior recently surveyed. It is a matter concerning which only Colorado and New Mexico have any interest, except a few miles where the line touches Oklahoma. It is quite evident that the President of the United States was not advised when he vetoed the joint resolution and had not looked up the history of the transaction, either from Colorado or the Department of the Interior.

I have some papers which I wish to present and some reasons which I shall give at the proper time, but I am not prepared to do it now, and I ask consent that the message may be laid aside, to be called up subsequently.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the veto message be temporarily laid aside to be called up at a later date. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INJURED EMPLOYEES, ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 22340) relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing contained in the act approved May thirties, nineteen hundred and eight, entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," shall prevent the Isthmian Canal Commission, under rules to be fixed by the commission, from granting to its injured employees, whether engaged in a hazardous employment or otherwise, leave of absence with pay for time necessarily lost as a result of injuries received in the course of employment, not exceeding in the aggregate thirty days per annum: Provided, however, That compensation paid to such injured employees under such regulations shall be deducted from any compensation which such employees may be entitled to receive under the terms of the said act.

With the following amendment:

Strike out the word "thirties," in line 3, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirtieth."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what the object of this bill and amendment is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I do. I suppose the gentleman reserves his right to object?

Mr. WALDO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of Congress we passed a law providing for compensation to injured employees of the Government. That law provided that no compensation should be paid except where the injured employee was kept from his work for at least fifteen days. It applied to the Isthmian Canal, and the law provided compensation should not be given there except in case of hazardous employment on the canal. It had been the custom of the Isthmian Canal Commission, prior to that time, to give compensation to an injured employee whether he was engaged in hazardous employment or not, and also to give him compensation although his time kept from employment was less than fifteen days; but it has been construed that the Isthmian Canal Commission, being included in the law passed at the last session, is controlled by that law, and that under that law the former practice of the commission is changed so that now they can not pay to an injured employee any compensation unless that employment shall be called "hazardous" employment, nor can they pay him any compensation unless he is kept from work for at least fifteen days. The purpose of this bill, which is asked for both by the Isthmian Canal Commission and the labor employed on the canal, is to give to the commission the power to pay to an injured employee who is kept from his work less than fifteen days the pay for that time, and also to give the commission the power to pay although the employee is not technically engaged in hazardous employment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does this contemplate paying any person who gets injured down there whether he is injured in the line of his employment or not?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it expressly provides only in the line of their work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any limit fixed to the amount of damages that the Canal Commission can pay?

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that they can pay for thirty days' labor only. Then the injured employee must resort to the law which was passed at the last session.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are paid in the wages that they are drawing?

Mr. MANN. Paying them the wages for thirty days.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill is limited in its operation to employees in the Canal Zone on the canal?

Mr. MANN. Under the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not cover all of the service that is provided for in the bill that was passed at the last session of Congress?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I suppose the reason why this bill is not as broad as the other bill is that the gentleman's committee had only power, perhaps, to legislate respecting affairs upon the Panama Canal. It seems to me that the bill is a good one, and that it ought to cover all of the service that is defined in the bill fixing liability on the part of the Government for injuries while in the service of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman from Indiana may be correct. He and I will not dispute about that. But this is the situation: We are not attempting to correct the policy adopted by Congress with reference to the injured employees, but the construction of the Isthmian Canal is exactly like the construction of other great public works. Here the Government is doing the work itself, and our committee thought that the Government might well afford, in the case of the Isthmian Canal, to adopt the same policy that is adopted by contractors almost everywhere in the country, of paying a man a day's wages or a week's wages, where that man is deprived from work by reason of injuries incurred in that work.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe the gentleman is right, but I felt that the bill ought to cover the other class of service where the law provides that there shall be governmental liability for injuries occurring in the line of duty. That is all.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any provision in this bill which provides for compensation where the injury is such that it disables such employee for a longer period than thirty days?

Mr. MANN. That is already provided for in the law passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. SABATH. This only applies, then, where the employee is disabled for a shorter period than thirty days?

Mr. MANN. This applies only for thirty days, as far as the Isthmian Canal Commission is concerned, and provides that if the employee receives compensation, then that amount shall be deducted from the amount which he receives through the law passed at the last session of Congress.

And I might say that the law passed at the last session of Congress is extremely cumbersome. As far as the Isthmian Canal Commission is concerned, in my opinion that commission ought not to have been included in the law, but we are not seeking now to correct that. Under that law before an employee on the Isthmus can receive any compensation there must be a report made by the commission to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has to make a finding in the case and O. K. the voucher, which necessarily takes a considerable length of time.

Mr. SABATH. Is not the gentleman from Illinois of the opinion we should amend that if that is the case?

Mr. MANN. Not in connection with this bill, except as we are doing it now.

Mr. KEIFER. In making this liberal provision for persons injured, regardless of whether they are injured in hazardous employment or not, you seem to make no distinction as to whether the employee has been guilty of contributory negligence. That is so, is it not?

Mr. MANN. That is so as far as the bill is concerned.

Mr. KEIFER. Then you do not take into account the fact that all persons injured, whether they have been guilty of contributory negligence or not, are treated there by the medical officers and surgeons of the Government in the hospitals. You do not take that into account in making this liberal provision.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; we take it into account in making this liberal provision, I will say to my friend. Now, under the law as it passed, it provides that an employee can not receive compensation if he has been guilty of negligence, but does not provide in reference to contributory negligence. Under the construction of that Isthmian Canal Commission we find that they have been reported here in a number of cases that they could not pay compensation at all, although the negligence in fact was not the negligence of the employee, though he had been guilty of some negligence, and we were trying to cover that in this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not familiar with the act, and therefore I asked for some information.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. KEIFER. Is the purpose of passing this to give compensation for injuries regardless of contributory negligence?

Mr. MANN. It does not.

Mr. KEIFER. The proviso in this bill says:

Provided, however, That compensation paid to such injured employees under such regulations shall be deducted from any compensation which such employees may be entitled to receive under the terms of said act.

Now, how are you going to carry out that provision?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think that is not difficult, I will say to my colleague from Ohio. Under that act the employee can only receive compensation who is injured and kept from work for more than fifteen days, but the act is very cumbersome. They have to send up here a report to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and he must pass upon it, and when a voucher is issued he must pass upon it, and then it goes back to Panama. Now, we thought that the Canal Commission might well have permission to pay compensation up to thirty days, but that overlapped the other act, and hence we provide the man can not receive compensation from both sources. If he receives it from the commission, then it is deducted from the amount which he receives through the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, it looks as if there were some considerable machinery about it.

Mr. MANN. The machinery about this is not great, but the machinery about the law which was passed at the last session of Congress is beyond comprehension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington was granted leave of absence on account of trip to Panama on official business.

SALES OF LAND, COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21458), and that the same be now considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21458) authorizing sales of land within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation to the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum and to the University of Idaho.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the State of Idaho, for the use of the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum, land not to exceed in area four sections, to be selected by the governor of the State, within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said State to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price per acre as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the regents of the University of the State of Idaho, for the use of said university, land not to exceed 640 acres in area, to be selected by the said regents of the said university within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said regents to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price per acre as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Idaho yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FRENCH. I do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I reserve the right to object. I want the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. All that the bill contemplates is the sale of a tract of land not to exceed four sections to the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum, and the sale of 640 acres to the University of Idaho. The necessity for the bill lies in the fact that it is very hard for institutions such as these to obtain as large a tract as that from available public lands. If they buy from individuals they must pay exorbitant prices, and pay for houses, barns, and other improvements. The lands within the Coeur d'Alene Reservation have not yet been appraised. They will be, and after they have been appraised it is contemplated that the Secretary of the Interior will sell these lands to the different institutions at the price at which they are found to be appraised. The moneys will also go to a fund, the same as the moneys that will be derived from the disposition of the other lands within this reservation, namely, for the benefit of the Coeur d'Alene Indians.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has any limitation been put on the price of this land?

Mr. FRENCH. No; the lands have not been appraised as yet. That will be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This comes from the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. FRENCH. It comes from Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We had something of this sort before that committee, it seems to me.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of this bill? What is the object of getting this land?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, for two purposes; four sections to the insane asylum——

Mr. MANN. I understand what the bill provides; but what do they want the land for?

Mr. FRENCH. They want to use the land for the support of the asylum, and as well to furnish means of employment for such inmates as would be able to work.

Mr. MANN. Is it proposed to have the insane asylum located on this land? There is nothing in the bill or in the report to indicate that.

Mr. FRENCH. The asylum is already located, but it is so near the lands that the lands could be made serviceable for the asylum, and it is difficult to acquire any land——

Mr. MANN. No one knows how near it may be to the asylum. How large is the Coeur d'Alene Reservation?

Mr. FRENCH. It embraces something like half a million acres of land.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know how near they may select this land to the asylum, nor for what purpose they are going to select it?

Mr. FRENCH. The authorities of the asylum want the land for the use of the asylum in its maintenance and in furnishing employment to such of the inmates as may be able to work.

Mr. MANN. They propose to send the inmates of this asylum off several miles, or 40 or 50 miles, in order to work this land?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, under the management of the asylum there are some inmates who would be benefited. The asylum has already some land that they are using for the purposes I have mentioned. They want to get this land from this source in order to save the trouble and expense of trying to acquire as much as they want from numerous individuals.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid very much that the gentleman can not answer the question, from lack of information.

Mr. FRENCH. I think I have answered the question.

Mr. MANN. Here is a proposition to let the State of Idaho select four sections of land for the State Insane Asylum and another lot of land for the State University. There is no restriction made as to whether it is to be used, nothing to indicate whether it is real-estate speculation which the State wishes to embark in or whether they wish to use the land for the purpose of carrying on the work of the two institutions.

There is nothing in either the bill or the report which gives any indication, and the gentleman himself seems unable to inform us.

Mr. FRENCH. But I have informed the gentleman as to what is the object of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Where is the land to be found?

Mr. FRENCH. It may be any unallotted lands within the reservation. In the one case the land is to be selected by the board of regents of the university, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and in the other by the governor.

Mr. MANN. Well, it strikes me to be a very ridiculous proposition for an insane asylum to purchase land at some considerable distance from the asylum with a view of having inmates work on the land.

Mr. FRENCH. Of course the authorities of the asylum would doubtless employ many men in the handling of this land. They would use the land for the purpose of raising garden products and grain, for pasturage for stock, and all that sort of thing for the institution.

Mr. MANN. This land is now subject to homestead entry, is it?

Mr. FRENCH. No; but the reservation will soon be opened for settlement, and when that is done the land will be taken up by private individuals, and it will be impossible for the institution to acquire any considerable area of land without great work, and they would have to pay more money for such lands than if they were allowed to have an opportunity to purchase the lands in the manner proposed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did you not put a minimum price on this land?

Mr. FRENCH. We can not do that reasonably prior to appraisement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why was it not done?

Mr. FRENCH. My original bill fixed the price as the appraised price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why was it stricken out?

Mr. FRENCH. It was stricken out because no definite price had been fixed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You can say whether it is worth $2.50 an acre or $5 an acre?

Mr. FRENCH. We can hardly indicate an approximate price for these lands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do you suppose it is worth an acre?

Mr. FRENCH. It has not been appraised as yet.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How do you know it will take four sections if you do not know something about the value?

Mr. FRENCH. They want to have that amount of land.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if it is to be used for real asylum purposes, that is one thing; if it is really to be used as a real-estate speculation, I would like to find it out.

Mr. FRENCH. It has nothing to do with a real-estate speculation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am going to object to the consideration of the bill unless something of an arrangement can be made by which a minimum price will be fixed. I do not want to be captious. Why do not they put that in, and why leave it with the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANN. I want to call the attention of my friend from Tennessee to the report. On the second page of the report he will find this report from Mr. Pierce, Acting Secretary of the Interior, in which he says:

> I have no material objection to the enactment of the bill, as the price which the Indians will receive from the asylum for the lands will equal the amount which they will receive were the lands appropriated under the homestead laws.

So I take it that so far as the price is concerned, that is practically fixed by the Interior Department, and it is that they would fix the price at the same price as it would be offered to homesteaders.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the price? Does the gentleman know what the value of those lands are?

Mr. FRENCH. As I say, the price will be fixed by a board of appraisers, who are to appraise the land.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much in dollars and cents?

Mr. FRENCH. The lands have not been appraised yet.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What did you propose?

Mr. FRENCH. I have not proposed any amount.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say that you put a minimum price for this land in your bill?

Mr. FRENCH. We struck out that. It was to be the appraised price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What was the minimum price in dollars and cents?

Mr. FRENCH. It was not in dollars and cents. It was the value the commission would place upon it. We think they will appraise some of the land at one figure and some of the land at another.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much is it worth an acre?

Mr. FRENCH. It has different values.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did you ever see the land?

Mr. FRENCH. I have been over the land.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it timber land?

Mr. FRENCH. They do not want any timber land. There is some land that has timber on it, but what they want is agricultural land, to be used for the asylum; and the university wants its section of land in order to establish a biological laboratory upon it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman to let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FRENCH. Very well.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the present I will object, and ask that the bill go over.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS SANTEE RIVER, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23711) to build a bridge across the Santee River, South Carolina.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Santee River Cypress Lumber Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a drawbridge and approaches thereto across the Santee River at or near its lumber mill plant and property from its property in Clarendon County, S. C., on the east or north bank, as may be, to its property on the west or south bank, as may be, of said river, in the State of South Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NEZ PERCÉ INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19095) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell isolated tracts of land within the Nez Percé Indian Reservation, and that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from further consideration of the following bill, and that the same be considered in the House.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell at public auction any isolated and unappropriated public lands embraced within the Nez Percé Indian Reservation in the same manner as isolated tracts within the public domain are sold under the general law providing for the sale of isolated tracts.

With the following proposed committee amendment:

Provided, That for agricultural lands purchasers under this act shall pay not less than $3.75 per acre, and for lands valuable for stone and timber they shall pay not less than $5 per acre.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. We could not hear the reading of the bill. Now, what is it?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides that isolated tracts of land on the Nez Percé Indian Reservation may be sold under the isolated-tract law, provided, however, that a greater price per acre shall be fixed as the minimum. The reason for the passage of the bill is this: The Nez Percé Reservation was opened to settlement something like fourteen or fifteen years ago. Most of the lands have been taken up under the law that was passed providing for the opening of this reservation. A few patches here and there remain which would make desirable accessions to farms, yet at the same time they are of such small value that no one can afford to take up the land under the law, and the Government has no means of disposing of these tracts. The Government has a means of disposing of other isolated tracts in all the public domain. Here is a reservation that was not taken care of in that respect, and these isolated tracts lie there undisposed of.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does it happen that these lands were left out of the general law?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know how it happened. The isolated-tract law does not apply to these lands. Individuals have tried to buy them, but the department holds that the general isolated-tract law does not apply, and we simply want to have it applied to these lands.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the minimum price fixed on them?

Mr. FRENCH. The minimum price under the isolated-tract law is $1.25 an acre. Here it is $3.75 an acre, because that was the minimum price under the special law opening the Nez Percé Reservation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much is this land worth now?

Mr. FRENCH. It certainly can not be worth much, or it would be taken up under the homestead law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How large are the tracts?

Mr. FRENCH. Each isolated tract must be very small. I do not know the exact size.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Forty acres, 80 acres, or 160 acres?

Mr. FRENCH. They must be not greater than 160 acres.

Mr. MANN. Why?

Mr. FRENCH. Under the general isolated-tract law they must be not greater than that.

Mr. MANN. Under the isolated-tract law they must be not over 40 acres, but this has no such restriction.

Mr. FRENCH. Lines 7 and 8 provide for their sale under the general law providing for the sale of isolated tracts.

Mr. MANN. That provides that the sale shall be made "in the same manner;" that only provides for advertising, as to the manner of making the sale. The isolated tract land law provides that you can sell only 40 acres or less under it. There is no such limitation here. Under this bill you can sell 1,040 acres by advertising for the highest bidder.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the largest isolated tract in this territory?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. There is no information before the House as to how much land there is among the isolated tracts.

Mr. FRENCH. There are very few tracts, scattered here and there.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have a report from the department showing the amount of land.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will end this discussion by objecting, until we can get a chance to investigate it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JUDICIAL DIVISIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

The Clerk called the committees, and when the Committee on the Judiciary was reached,

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up for passage the bill (H. R. 21898) to provide for the establishment of judicial divisions in the district of Indiana, designating the places where court shall be held, and for other purposes connected therewith.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the judicial district of Indiana is hereby divided into six divisions, which shall be known, respectively, as the "first division," the "second division," the "third division," the "fourth division," the "fifth division," and the "sixth division" of the district of Indiana. The counties of Allen, Dekalb, Steuben, Lagrange, Noble, Elkhart, Kosciusko, Wabash, Miami, Huntington, Whitley, Wells, Adams, Blackford, and Jay shall constitute the first division, and the court for said division shall be held at Fort Wayne, Ind. The counties of Lake, Porter, Laporte, St. Joseph, Marshall, Starke, Fulton, Pulaski, Carroll, White, Jasper, Newton, Benton, Tippecanoe, and Warren shall constitute the second division, and the court for said division shall be held at Hammond, Ind. The counties of Vanderburg, Posey, Warrick, Spencer, Perry, Dubois, Pike, Gibson, Knox, Daviess, and Martin shall constitute the third division, and the court for said division shall be held at Evansville, Ind. The counties of Floyd, Harrison, Crawford, Orange, Washington, Clark, Jackson, Scott, Jennings, Jefferson, Ripley, Ohio, and Switzerland shall constitute the fourth division, and the court for said division shall be held at New Albany, Ind. The counties of Sullivan, Greene, Lawrence, Vigo, Clay, Vermilion, and Parke shall constitute the fifth division, and the terms of court for said division shall be held at Terre Haute, Ind. The remaining counties embraced in said district shall constitute the sixth division, and the terms of court for said division shall be held at Indianapolis, Ind.

SEC. 2. That the terms of said courts shall be held: In the first division at Fort Wayne, Ind., on the first Monday in May and the third Monday in November of each year; in the second division, at Hammond, Ind., on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November in each year; in the third division, at Evansville, Ind., on the third Monday in March and the first Monday in October of each year; in the fourth division, at New Albany, Ind., on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September of each year; in the fifth division, at Terre Haute, Ind., on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October of each year; in the sixth division, at Indianapolis, Ind., on the third Monday in May and the first Monday in December of each year: Provided, however, That if a trial is in progress in either of the divisions aforesaid at the time when the term of court in either of said other divisions is to begin, then the court shall continue in session in said first-named division until said case is disposed of.

SEC. 3. That all civil suits not of a local nature which shall be hereafter brought in said district against a single defendant, or where all the defendants reside in the same division of said district, shall be brought and tried in the division in which the defendant or defendants reside; but if there are two or more principal defendants residing in different divisions, such suit or proceeding may be brought and tried in either division, and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in any or all of said divisions.

SEC. 4. That in all cases of removal of suits and proceedings from the courts of the State of Indiana to the courts of the United States in said district, such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts in such division.

SEC. 5. That prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in said district shall be tried within the division in which such crimes or offenses are committed, and all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in any division shall be residents of such division.

SEC. 6. That all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district courts of said district which would, if instituted after the passage of this act, be required to be brought or tried in any particular division thereof, shall be transferred to such division and there disposed of in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all process, writs, and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as belonging to the terms of the court in the divisions of said district in which they are tried, in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto originally.

SEC. 7. That full records in all actions and proceedings in any division shall be kept in the office of the clerk in such division, and that the clerk of the district and circuit courts for the district of Indiana and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said courts; and said clerk and marshal shall appoint deputies in each of said divisions in which a deputy clerk and deputy marshal does not already reside, who shall reside in and keep their offices at the place of holding court in each of said divisions.

SEC. 8. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER. This bill provides for the appointment of various clerks or deputies with salaries, and I think the bill ought to go on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New Jersey call the attention of the Chair to that part of the bill which he refers to?

Mr. PARKER. At the end of section 7, page 5, it says:

> And said clerk and marshal shall appoint deputies in said division in which a deputy clerk and deputy marshal does not already reside, who shall reside in and keep their offices at the place of holding court in each of said divisions.

Mr. CLAYTON. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order made by the gentleman from New Jersey comes too late.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill makes no charge whatever on the Treasury. There is no provision that they shall be paid out of public money. They have to be paid by the clerk and the marshal. There is no provision in the bill making a charge on the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether, if this bill passes, it does not authorize an appropriation to pay the deputy clerks and deputy marshals?

Mr. JENKINS. No; because they are paid by fees.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. CHANEY. I understand that they are paid by fees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the clerks of the federal courts are paid from fees that are received, and that their pay does not exceed the amount of the fees; that there is a limitation on the salary from the fees after a maximum is received, and that the remainder, if any, goes into the Treasury.

Mr. JENKINS. The practice has always been in cases of this kind that where no provision is made for the payment out of the Public Treasury the clerk and marshal shall pay out of their own moneys.

Mr. WALDO. Is it not a fact that the fees that are received by the clerk are paid into the United States Treasury, except certain specified amounts?

Mr. JENKINS. That has already been stated.

Mr. WALDO. Then, indirectly it is a draft on the United States Treasury, is it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair only speaks from his general recollection as to how the clerks are compensated, but it seems to the Chair that it is a matter of speculation or surmise as to whether there is a charge on the Treasury. In such cases it has been usual to consider these bills in the House as belonging on the House Calendar. Points of order in such cases, as the Chair recollects, have not been sustained. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY], who introduced the bill.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill has for its purpose the making of the United States courts within the district of Indiana convenient to the people and litigants of that State. As it is now every person who brings a suit in the United States court for the district of Indiana must go to Indianapolis and institute his suit, and he must take all his witnesses there, where they must pay their hotel bills, and he must be at the expense of going the distance from his home to the capital of the State that his controversy may be determined.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, if he employs a lawyer from his own neighborhood he has to pay the expenses necessary for the transportation of the lawyer from his home to the court at Indianapolis and pay his expenses at a hotel while there. So it is, therefore, an advantage in two respects. It gives to the people the advantage of having a chance to go into the United States court for the determination of the matters which belong in the United States court without inconvenience and without extra expense.

It enables the lawyers who live outside of the city of Indianapolis to have a chance to earn fees in the practice of the law in the courts of the United States. About the only real objection to this bill proceeds from those persons who now have a monopoly of practice in the United States courts in the State of Indiana because of their fortunate location in the city of Indianapolis, where the United States court is held.

Mr. DIXON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that at the present time one can only file a suit in the federal court at Indianapolis?

Mr. CHANEY. I undertake to say that the only place where suits are filed and tried in United States courts for the district of Indiana is at the city of Indianapolis.

Mr. DIXON. They can be filed in any of the districts.

Mr. CHANEY. Oh, I think they could be filed and transmitted by mail possibly to the clerk's office at the capital of the State. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. DIXON. They are placed on the docket in the respective districts.

Mr. CHANEY. But when you come to try the case the litigant must go to Indianapolis to try the case, and his lawyer must go along. The result of it all is that the litigant concludes that if he has to pay his lawyer the fee to go to Indianapolis to try his case for him and pay his expenses while there and his hotel bill while he is there, he better employ an Indianapolis lawyer, who does not have to go away from home and to whom he would not have to pay these extra expenses. Now, after the 4th of March next I shall be under the necessity of earning my bread in the sweat of my face, and, as I am a lawyer, I want to have the chance to practice in the United States court in my State. I am therefore interested personally in the passage of this bill.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he not think, then, that the title of the bill should be changed?

Mr. CHANEY. Oh, I think it is not necessary to change the title of the bill, because I will be sure to mix in the practice of the United States courts if I get an opportunity.

Mr. LANDIS. I would suggest that the title be changed to "A bill to provide a local court subject to the United States court's jurisdiction in which the gentleman from the second district can practice."

Mr. CHANEY. Oh, I would like to inform the gentleman, who is a farmer and not a lawyer [laughter], that it will not have any such modification as that. I want simply to say that this bill provides for holding the United States district court for Indiana in Indianapolis, Evansville, New Albany, Fort Wayne, Hammond, and Terre Haute.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHANEY. I must say if I am only to get ten minutes I must have a chance to make my speech.

Mr. WALDO. I would like to know in which one of those towns the United States court is already held.

Mr. CHANEY. The United States court is held in no place in any of these towns save Indianapolis at this time.

Mr. WALDO. Are not there divisions already in the State?

Mr. CHANEY. There are divisions in the State of Indiana providing that the United States judge may hold court in Evansville, New Albany, Fort Wayne, and Hammond—outside of Indianapolis—but he will not do it.

Mr. WALDO. Is it not a fact that he holds court in those places whenever there is any business?

Mr. CHANEY. He does not hold court there.

Mr. WALDO. I would suggest that instead of this bill the proper application of the gentleman should be to the President of the United States for this man's removal.

Mr. CHANEY. We have had enough experience along that line to believe it is an easier matter to do this business by passage of this bill than to follow the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any provision for holding court in these places?

Mr. CHANEY. It is provided that the court may hold sessions at Evansville, New Albany, Fort Wayne, and Hammond; but the United States judge does not find it imperative to do so, and he prefers to stay at home to hold the court, and the result is that we do not have any court held there.

Mr. BUTLER. Are accommodations made there now for holding the court?

Mr. CHANEY. Accommodations are easily made. At every one of these places there is a federal building, and it is very easy to rig up a place for the United States court to be held.

Mr. PAYNE. Then we will have to build a building for the court room.

Mr. CHANEY. Oh, no; we have a court room already. All that would have to be done would be to put in a bench for the judge to sit behind and to provide chairs and tables for lawyers.

Mr. BUTLER. In these places now where the judge may hold court are accommodations provided at this time?

Mr. CHANEY. So far as the building is concerned accommodations are provided.

Mr. BUTLER. But the court rooms are not provided?

Mr. CHANEY. Take it at Terre Haute, for instance, where there is simply a provision now for the post-office and the internal-revenue offices—there is a large room which will be commodious for holding court in that building.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that it is not compulsory to do so now.

Mr. CHANEY. No.

Mr. BUTLER. Terre Haute is not one of the places provided now?

Mr. CHANEY. No; it is one of the places that is added in this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. But at Evansville the judge may hold court?

Mr. CHANEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman to say that he never did. Is the court room arranged for his accommodation?

Mr. CHANEY. The room is not absolutely arranged, but that is a very simple matter and it could be readily arranged.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, but I wanted to know whether accommodations had been afforded the judge so that he could hold his court at that point.

Mr. CHANEY. That is a matter that would be very easily provided for, and without any considerable expense, if there was a requirement that court be held at those places.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman does not mean to be understood to say that the judge does not hold court at Evansville?

Mr. CHANEY. I mean to be understood as saying just exactly that thing. He visits Evansville, Fort Wayne, New Albany, and Hammond for the purpose, as I take it, simply of conferring about any business the people of these places may have.

Mr. LANDIS. And he never holds court?

Mr. CHANEY. No.

Mr. LANDIS. Does not the gentleman know that no cases have been removed from any of those points to Indianapolis except at the request of the parties to the litigation and not because of the desire or the pleasure of the court?

Mr. CHANEY. Well, I do not know precisely as to what my colleague refers, but I simply know this, the United States court has not been held at those places, and the people demand that they shall have the privilege of having court held at those places.

Mr. LANDIS. I will state Judge Anderson, of the federal court, informed me that no cases had been removed from those points to Indianapolis except on the motion of the parties to the suit.

Mr. CHANEY. Then, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Has the United States judge ever tried a case at either Evansville, New Albany, Fort Wayne, or Hammond?

Mr. LANDIS. I think he has.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman answer this question? Will the gentleman tell how many cases have emanated from those outside points within the last five years?

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question because that is exactly to the point now. I want simply to say that because the United States district court is held only at Indianapolis there have been just as few cases filed from these respective localities in the United States court at Indianapolis as possible because of the invenience attending it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I am not from Indiana and I do not speak at first hand. This matter was very carefully considered. We understood that there was opposition on the part of the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, but his engagements were such that he was not able to attend the hearings. He asked for further time, but a report was put in. I simply stated in my very short minority report the way in which the matter struck me. I am unable to concur in the majority report for dividing the State of Indiana into six divisions. Our information as to the press of business or necessity usually comes from the judge or the district attorney, and they do not recommend it nor have we received such recommendation from the Department of Justice. It has written some letters, but nothing recommending this bill. I find that there is no delay whatever in business in Indiana, that one judge is able to do the business, and six divisions will mean sooner or later more judges. The State is compact. The capital is in its geographical and railroad center. Under the present law two terms must now be held in five different towns. I am not quite clear as to whether there has to be one at each town or two in each town each year. I think that the convenience of the people and of the bar is generally much better served by leaving the place of trial to the discretion of the court rather than by attempting by legislation in Congress, where we know nothing about it, to force the trial in any particular division that we may form. So, with a divided representation from the State, I would not be willing to support this bill, and I am not so willing now, and with these remarks I must leave it to the House.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, this matter is of moment to the people of Indiana. In all of the neighboring States they have more than one district, and they all have several subdivisions. I can not from memory state the exact number of districts of the adjoining States, but there are at least two districts in Kentucky, which have a smaller population than Indiana, and I think there are four places of holding court.

Mr. LANGLEY. Four in the western district and six in the eastern.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Ten places where the judges are compelled to hold court. Illinois has five federal judges, but I do not know in how many places they are required to hold court. Ohio has three, and Michigan has two federal judges, while still having a smaller population than Indiana. Why should this discrimination be made against the people of Indiana? It is said that there is not enough litigation to warrant it. The reason there is not enough litigation to warrant it, Mr. Speaker, is because the people dislike to be dragged off to Indianapolis, and for that reason refuse to bring their cases in the federal court. I have known instances in which litigants brought their suits for less than they wanted to in order to prevent them being carried into the federal court, when they were bringing suit against a foreign corporation. As a matter of fact, the arrangement in Indiana practically amounts to a denial of justice. It is a very fine thing for the people of Indianapolis to have a monopoly of this federal business so long. It is a bad thing for the State at large, and I hope that this House will vote to pass that bill and give us this relief. I do not care whether it helps the lawyers or not. They can take care of themselves. I want some arrangement made by which a poor man will not be compelled to go to Indianapolis, away from his home, pay the way of his witnesses, and other expense away from home, when he is entitled to trial at his home.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this poor man, who can not get to Indianapolis and file a suit in the federal court, able to bring a suit at home?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. In some instances, yes. I am speaking of the defendant more largely than the plaintiff.

Mr. MANN. The defendant has nothing to do with the amount of litigation, has he?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. The defendants, especially in criminal cases. In civil cases a man will bring his suit for a sum too small to enable the corporation to carry it into the federal court, for the reason that he does not want to go away from his home to try the case. A man is entitled to be tried by a jury of his peers.

Mr. MANN. At home?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. At home, or just as near to his home as possible.

Mr. MANN. In the state courts? You want to force him into the federal courts.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. People get into the federal courts sometimes through no fault of their own. They are entitled to a speedy hearing. They are entitled to consideration. They are entitled to be tried at home, among their neighbors, without being put to this expense. The question is asked, Why the necessity for these districts in other States? There are three districts in Florida where the population is less than one-third of the State of Indiana. Indiana is a great, rich, and populous State. There is no reason on earth why the same rule that applies to other States in the Union ought not to apply to Indiana.

I do not agree with my learned friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] that the judge himself is the first person to decide this matter. The judge decides to hold a case where it puts him to the least possible inconvenience. That is the way he has always decided, and judges are made up of human nature the same as other men are made. They will not put themselves to inconvenience if they can help it.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the courts were made for the people. I do not believe that the people were made for the courts. [Applause.] Let us give the people a chance to get to their courts, let them have a chance to be heard, and it does not matter as to what is most convenient for the lawyers. I pass that by. I do not care what is most convenient for the judges or the clerk of the court, but I do care what is most convenient for the people, and the people are demanding that this bill be passed.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] have forty minutes, not to come out of the time of the committee.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes in that application.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] can reserve his time and yield such time as he desires. They can arrive at that later on.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to accommodate the chairman of the committee, but I would rather have a little time in my own right in order that I may be able to yield to some gentlemen who desire time on the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Then I will reserve the balance of my time and yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the merits of this bill, entirely free from prejudice, in the hope of convincing the House that this measure ought not to pass. It is well enough for gentlemen, in the name of the dear people, to invoke applause and challenge sentimental considerations in adopting legislation; but when you come to the enactment of law it is far better to speak entirely to the merits of the question regardless of the power of sentiment which Members may have of a personal character.

My colleague [Mr. CHANEY] revealed the entire policy of the supporters of this measure, I think inadvertently, in being stung to an answer by a question propounded by my colleague [Mr. LANDIS]. He wants this bill passed for the advantage of Mr. CHANEY, to aid him in litigation in the federal courts. Mr. Speaker, this measure is not in the interest of Mr. CHANEY, but is in the interest of litigation——

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OVERSTREET. And for that reason ought not to pass.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield for a question.

Mr. CHANEY. I simply wanted that no such impression should go out as that this bill is for the purpose for providing for the lawyer. That was only an incidental remark of mine, and therefore I do not want anybody to suppose that I have no other purpose in passing this bill than to make it interesting for myself.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am perfectly willing for the Members who heard the gentleman's reply to construe what he meant by it. It was the most effective argument that has been made in support of the measure. We have in Indiana one district—one district of the entire State. There are five places for the holding of courts, where suits may be brought, and provisions of law for two terms of the court in each place. In spite of what has been said by the gentlemen who have spoken in support of this measure, I undertake to say, and I challenge contradiction from any reputable source, that in not one solitary instance in Indiana have any of the judges ever refused, ever arbitrarily declined to hear a case in any one of these several districts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield for a question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is it not a fact that there has not been a single case tried in New Albany in the federal court in the last seven years?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know how many years, but I am coming to that presently. One of the arguments that is urged against this bill is that there is no litigation there in the federal court. The judge always attends under the law and his oath at each of these several points when there is business to be transacted, and under the law his officers are compelled to attend. They have the right to remove a cause to Indianapolis, the capital, upon motion or argument of the parties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this law, if the House should adopt this bill, will divide the State into six territorial divisions. It arbitrarily provides that in all suits, criminal and civil, as well on the chancery as on the law side of the court, the issues shall be made, the grand juries meet, and the cases brought to a conclusion in the divisions where the causes are originally brought. It is a question of litigation and not of the litigants. I again refer to the argument of my colleague [Mr. CHANEY], which discloses it is in the interest of stimulating business in the federal courts.

I do not share the feeling of my colleague [Mr. HOLLIDAY] that the State of Indiana has been discriminated against in the matter of the federal court divisions. It is a tribute to the State of Indiana that the federal court business has fallen off in that State. It is a compliment to the people that they do not go to law as much in our State as they do elsewhere; and I think I am making no disparagement of our neighboring States because we have a reduction in federal suits. But we have no complaint among the people of Indiana as to justice and accommodation of the parties in our suits in the federal courts.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to the fact that the judge holding the court in Indiana, the clerk and officers in charge of the records of the court, and the Attorney-General of the United States have all uniformly recommended against this legislation. Where else would you go? To gentleman who are interested in stimulating the business of the courts?

The Attorney-General in two or three different letters has expressed decided opposition to the division of the State of Indiana into these several judicial divisions. The clerk of the court has by repeated letters given instances of the falling off of the business in the federal courts as an evidence that the litigation has been cared for and concluded to the satisfaction of all parties. The judge of the court in a letter over his own signature, which I shall read in a moment, states not only his ability to take care of all federal business in that State, but to have time to give aid to other States, notably Illinois, at Chicago, in the relief of the courts there, and then have from three to four and one-half months every year for his vacation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman states that the Attorney-General has sent a recommendation against the passage of this bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I so stated.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean the Attorney-General or the United States district attorney?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Which one of them?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The present Attorney-General. It is a recent letter.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was that in a letter to the gentleman himself?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes. I am going to read the letter. I wanted to read these letters in the order of their dates. These letters may seem to gentlemen to be a little old, but the fact is that my colleagues, who are interested in the division of the State into federal districts, have each in turn introduced bills; I forget how many different ones. I think my colleague [Mr. CHANEY] introduced more than one, but each one of them took a shot at it; so that when I would prepare data they would overcome my opposition temporarily by introducing another bill, and that would be a more recent bill than I had data prepared for; but the conditions are the same in the State. There has been an unusual amount of interest displayed in this matter by my colleagues, who have desired the establishment of divisions in their judicial districts.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would the inevitable result of passing a bill like this, creating so many new divisions, be that another district judge would be required, who might be selected from among your colleagues?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think if that had been made a part of the bill I might have withdrawn my opposition; but in all seriousness, I do believe that that result will undoubtedly follow the passage of this bill, and I predict now that if the House should inadvertently, without Members taking into consideration the real merits of this question, pass this bill, it will come back to this House with an amendment from the Senate, providing for another judge. Now, I do not want to make any statements which may wound the feelings of my colleagues. I prefer to base my opposition entirely upon the merits of this bill. My honest belief is that the litigation in the federal courts in Indiana has declined, and that it has declined as a result of proper causes, and not because of any lack of attention by the federal judge and his officers. I believe that in the future, as in the past, substantial justice will be given in all the cases in the federal courts. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a little more rapidly——

Mr. DIXON. Just a moment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DIXON. Does this bill require the holding of a grand jury at each term in each division; and what is your idea of the additional expense caused thereby?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was just approaching that phase of my argument. The bill does require the holding of grand juries in each one of the several divisions instead of one grand jury, which the law now authorizes for the State.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, in such instances there must be called together a grand jury twice a year to consider offenses against the federal laws. I do not see how we could avoid calling together two grand juries a year. That will multiply the expense, I should say, six times, with the exception of the difference in mileage which the jurors would be entitled to.

Take an instance of the violation of the postal law; somebody writes a dun for a bill on a postal card, which is a violation of the criminal code. Under the present methods that violator of the law would be brought before a United States commissioner, and the chances are that for that slight offense it would be transferred to the federal court where the judge then was sitting. Gentlemen will realize that nearly all the minor offenses of the criminal statutes are committed by poor people who can not give bail. Now, take for example this man who has written on a postal card a dun to a creditor. He can not be tried for six months in the division where the crime was committed, and he must wait the calling of the grand jury together in that district, and he must wait a trial there, and that will, in my opinion, result in many, many a poor fellow perjuring himself by pleading guilty in order to be free of the confinement in the jail. As it is now he need not wait twenty-four hours.

Another instance on the civil side: Suppose some petition is brought for an injunction in the federal court; a poor man's ground is about to be entered or taken by a railroad upon which to lay its tracks and he does not want his property to be taken; he does not desire the damage to be done, and he does not want to wait. He would bring his action by injunction wherever the court was then held, and it could be stopped; but under the provisions of this bill he would be compelled to wait until the court was held in that section of the State before he could have it heard. And if the suit were brought at the end of a term, he would have to wait for an extra term of court in order to make up the issue, and even a demurrer to the complaint could not be heard by the court. If there was much litigation in the State; if there was a crowded condition of the docket; if there was great inconvenience to litigants, then gentlemen might with some propriety and some force argue for the passage of this bill.

But it is said by the clerk of the court that since 1878 the litigation in the federal court of Indiana has been steadily declining. After the passage of the bankrupt law the bankrupt cases were taken before referees—11 of them in our State—and then it fell off very materially, and there is less business today, according to the letter that I have, than there was a year ago. It is steadily declining in all lines of litigation.

But, Mr. Speaker, in order to answer the argument of my colleague [Mr. CHANEY] as to why there have not been cases in other divisions than Indianapolis, I wish to read from a record as the strongest evidence that can be brought before the House. In the year 1907, ending December 31 this data was prepared by me to meet a bill which these gentlemen had brought up, not knowing whether another one might come up. I have not the data brought down to date, but I have the assurance of the clerk that it is less now than it was a year ago.

There were brought at Evansville no cases of civil suits by the United States. There were 2 civil suits and 1 criminal case, making 3 in that year in Evansville.

At Fort Wayne there were brought 6 civil and no suits of any other kind.

At New Albany there were 2 civil suits and none of any other kind.

At Hammond there were 2 civil suits and none of any other kind.

At Indianapolis there were 60 civil suits, 4 civil suits by the United States, and 34 criminal cases. Out of the total 98 cases in the year were brought at Indianapolis and 13 outside, making 111 cases all told in the State that year, both criminal and civil.

On the chancery side of the court, Mr. Speaker, the master in chancery goes to the people and takes the depositions and does not drag them to the court. There are so few civil cases in the federal courts that there is no necessity of compelling the holding of courts at these different divisions in the State.

I will now read the letter of Judge Anderson, to which I referred a while ago:

The avowed object of the advocates of this bill, as I understand from the newspapers, is to bring these courts nearer to the people—that is, nearer to the litigants and their witnesses—to the end that litigation in these courts may be less expensive. The business here is divided into four classes: (a) Chancery; (b) common law; (c) criminal; (d) bankruptcy.

It is impossible to further localize the chancery business. Witnesses in chancery cases are not brought to the court to give testimony, but the master or the examiner goes to them. To attempt to dispose of the chancery business under the proposed bill would cause such delay and embarrassment as to amount to a denial of justice.

The effect of the bill would be to require all common-law and criminal cases to be tried in the respective divisions created by the bill. Since July 1, 1907, there have been 6 jury trials in common-law cases and 5 trials in criminal cases in these courts in the whole State. It is possible that there will be 1 common-law jury trial and 5 or 6 criminal trials between now and July 1, 1908, but no more. To require these cases to be tried as proposed by this bill would entail needless expense upon the Government and embarrass and delay the parties to the suits.

The bankruptcy business is now distributed among 11 referees throughout the State, and the proposed bill would not probably affect such business at all.

I am able to attend to all the business in this district under the present law without delay, economically, and have time to spare, but if the proposed legislation should be enacted, the business could not be attended to with anything like the promptness and economy with which it is now conducted.

Mr. Speaker, referring again to the disadvantages and evil effects of the calling of grand juries in these six several divisions, I want to cite the House to a law which was enacted for the very purpose of avoiding what this bill would bring about, if carried, and that is for the distribution from scattered points of the members of the federal grand jury in order that they might not fall within the influence of local sentiment, to the disadvantage of justice. This law is cited by the examiner sent to Indiana to investigate this very proposed legislation and by the present Attorney-General of the United States, and upon this report, in addition to other inquiries made by him, the present Attorney-General bases his opposition to the legislation. He says concerning that:

I can not approve of the provisions last above mentioned, since the effect of such provisions would be virtually to reverse the policy of the law embodied in section 802, Revised Statutes, taken from the judiciary act of 1789, which section reads as follows:

"Jurors should be returned from such parts of the district from time to time, as the court shall direct, so as to be most favorable to an impartial trial and so as not to incur any unnecessary expense or unduly to burden the citizens of any part of the district with such services."

Pass this law now before the House and we divide that little State into six different divisions, compelling the grand juries to meet twice a year in each division, forcing the trials there, and reversing the policy of the statute which has obtained for nearly a hundred years or for quite a hundred years.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just for a question.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Has the gentleman made examination to determine whether these dire calamities of which the gentleman speaks have overtaken the States of Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and Kentucky, where they have such courts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer the gentleman. Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, and Michigan have nothing to do with this case. Each State is an entity in itself. Its population, its condition of business, the character of the people, the character of the litigation—all are factors which enter into the matter in federal as well as state courts. I do not know how it is in these other States, but in the State of Indiana there is a law which relieves the federal court of much business by reason of compelling foreign corporations having agencies in the State to bring their actions in the state courts. That may possibly have something to do with the conditions which differ from those in the other four States mentioned. The population has not anything to do with it. I am surprised that my friend and colleague from the Fifth District [Mr. HOLLIDAY] does not take it as a compliment to the State instead of a stigma that we have less litigation there to-day than we had a year ago or five years ago or ten years ago.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say I believe that is brought about by the fact that everybody is compelled to go to Indianapolis.

Mr. OVERSTREET. By no means. I will say this, Mr. Speaker: The fact of the case is that there is not a State in the Union where the facilities of car traffic, by reason of interurban railway systems and electric lines, makes travel more easy or expeditious or satisfactory than in the State of Indiana. You can go from my friend's home at Brazil to Indianapolis ten times each day, if you wish, and return. My friend could eat every meal at his own home and sleep in his own bed and try cases in Indianapolis every day the court is in session. If he is obliged to go to Terre Haute, where this bill provides the headquarters of his district, he would not have equal facilities there. There is very little difference between the two points. That, in a large measure, is the reason for attorneys bringing their cases there and transferring them. But I repeat, Mr. Speaker, and emphasize that no man has any right on this floor to question the integrity of the judiciary of the country and the State, as embodied in these letters to which I have referred, by holding the judge responsible for denying justice to these people who desire their cases tried in the federal courts. I defy and repudiate the assertion that litigants refuse to bring cases because they are obliged to go to Indianapolis. It is a stigma upon the gentleman's own constituency to insist upon it. They have the same right other litigants have, and their cases are frequently brought there and they are transferred only upon motion of the parties. I challenge contradiction of the statement that during Judge Anderson's career as a federal judge he has never in any single instance arbitrarily transferred a case from any one of these present divisions to the capital of the State, and I await with patience until any gentleman on this floor rises in his place and upon his own personal knowledge takes issue with that statement.

I have a right, Mr. Speaker, to claim that the silence of these gentlemen to my invitation is an admission that they themselves know of no instance where the federal judge has arbitrarily removed a case. These cases can now be brought in my friend Mr. HOLLIDAY'S district, or Mr. CHANEY'S district at Evansville or New Albany or Fort Wayne, or at Hammond, or at Indianapolis, at the option of the parties, and they are removed to the capital only upon motion of the parties or by agreement—never upon the arbitrary order of the court, and always for the convenience of the parties.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to close as I began. I want this House to decide this bill upon its merits. I do not oppose this bill because I happen to live at Indianapolis. Unlike my colleague from the second district, I doubt seriously if I live to be a hundred years old that I shall ever have a case to bring or defend in the federal court. Mr. Speaker, this is in the interest of good judicial administration. This House can not afford to simply blindly order this bill passed because some people think it would increase business in the federal court.

We can not easily pass aside the voluntary and recognized objection to this legislation by those most intimately acquainted with it, the Attorney-General of the United States and the district judge of the State. In the interest of the criminal administration of the law, the poor people who may have to recline in the walls of the jail to wait the hearing of the grand jury of their district, and in the interest of the economy of the administration of the law, in the interest of good administration of the federal judiciary of Indiana, without any feeling of whether or not another judge is to be appointed, but with the firm belief of what would be the ultimate result if this bill should pass, I hope the House will vote against the measure and defeat the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO] and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, there is one very serious objection to this measure which I have not yet heard discussed. Under the present law relating to federal courts, and so far as I know throughout the whole of the United States, the records of the courts are kept at the central city in whatever district the court may be, so that anyone who desires to know what liens may exist upon real estate in the whole judicial district can go to one place—the clerk's office in that central city—and ascertain what liens there may be upon property in any part of that district. Under this bill the records are to be kept in each one of these six divisions relating to that division. The result would be that if anyone desired to search the title to a piece of property in Indianapolis he would have to go to the clerk's office in each of the six judicial divisions to ascertain whether there was not a lien existing against the property in that district.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALDO. And anyone who has ever searched a title knows that is so. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Do you mean to say, with land located in a particular district, a person would have to go to Indianapolis to find out the liens of record?

Mr. WALDO. He would have to go to each one of these six places to ascertain whether the court had not entered judgment against a man who owned property in Indianapolis and on which property such judgment would be a lien.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. WALDO. Not at all. There is nothing in this bill to limit the force of the judgment of the district court in any of these proposed six judicial divisions of Indiana to the particular division, and in whatever division the judgment was entered it would cover real estate owned by the defendant in every district in the State. That is the result of the bill; that is the way it reads and there is no question about it—not the slightest.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if in the State of New York they have to examine the records in every district in the State?

Mr. WALDO. No, but you are not establishing districts; you are dividing a district into divisions for the purpose of holding court, and you have not limited the force of the judgment of the district court to that division in which the court is held. The lien of the judgment covers the real estate of the judgment debtor in the whole district, unless you limit the lien to the judicial division, and that you have not done. Now, there is another trouble here——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield? Will not the effect of this bill also be to increase the number of clerks, custodians, inspectors' divisions, and so forth?

Mr. WALDO. It expressly provides for a deputy clerk, deputy marshal, and so forth, in each one of the divisions.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Notwithstanding the small amount of business to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] referred?

Mr. WALDO. Certainly. So that the expenses of clerks' offices in each one of these six divisions would very much exceed the expense of establishing a new district. If it is necessary that they should have a new United States district court in Indiana, then Indiana ought to be divided and a new district court established so there would be two districts, and then the judgment of the court would run to the district, instead of dividing the present district, the whole State, into six divisions, with the judgment of each division running to the whole State, so far as the lien upon real estate is concerned. It certainly will create the greatest confusion. Another trouble, too, is that this law establishes a new theory with regard to United States courts, that the records of the court shall be kept at one central place in each district. We shall find at once, if this bill is passed, that in every part of every State, and especially at every place of any size, it will be demanded that there be a new clerk's office, and that the records be kept there. You will have entered upon an endless chain of business of this kind, which will disrupt the present orderly methods of doing business in the United States courts and be a great detriment instead of a benefit to the people.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] occupy his time.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, after a thorough and full investigation of the matter, and with the approval, I believe, of every member of that committee with the exception of one, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]; and why the gentleman from New Jersey is opposed to the bill he did not make clear to the committee and, I must confess, did not make it clear this morning.

Mr. Speaker, nobody in this House, I suppose, is more reluctant to impugn the motives of any man. I find that the Members here, as a rule, when they act from any particular motive, act from a proper motive. Now, I do not blame the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], who resides in Indianapolis, for opposing this bill. It means much to his immediate constituents. It means much to the bar of Indianapolis. It means much to him, doubtless, when he shall, after the 4th of March next, again take his seat as a member of the bar at Indianapolis, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, representing the immediate constituents who are benefited more than any other constituency in Indiana by the law as it now stands, I think the gentleman is entirely right in opposing this measure.

The matter was threshed out very fully before the committee. Hearings were had, and the Indiana delegation was somewhat divided, but it appeared to the committee that a majority of that delegation favored the passage of this bill. It also appeared to the committee that it would be in the interest of public convenience of a majority of the people of Indiana, and by people I mean parties litigant, witnesses, and jurors, and not the lawyers nor the judge who presides over the court—I mean the people who are taken to the court as jurors, witnesses, and parties litigant. It is a convenience to have this division in the matter of saving of railroad expenses, in the matter of saving mileage to the Government of the United States for court witnesses as well as other expenses, and in the matter of saving mileage to jurors. Therefore, I think that a great State like the State of Indiana ought to have more than one place in which to hold court. Practically to-day they hold court at but one place.

This bill simply contemplates a division of this district into subdivisions. Why, there is hardly any State in the Union where you find a condition as remarkable as that in the State of Indiana. Take my own State, for instance—not quite as large, I believe, in point of territory as the State of Indiana, not quite so large in point of population, but exceeding, I must say with a pardonable pride, any other State in point of intelligence and patriotism of its people [laughter], but confessing her inferiority to Indiana in other and minor respects only, I must say—that State has three judges. It has a northern district, a middle district, and a southern district, and has subdivisions in these districts, so that we hold federal court in that State now at eight different places. It is a great public convenience. It takes the court to the people, and I must say that one of the judges of that State particularly, a most estimable and worthy man, a splendid lawyer, and a patriot, has never opposed the establishment of divisions of court, but is always willing to carry justice to the people at little expense to them and at as little expense to the Government as possible.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will.

Mr. WALDO. I would like to know whether the records of the courts in the gentleman's State are kept at different places?

Mr. CLAYTON. They are, of those particular courts; yes. They have deputy clerks and deputy marshals in these particular places. That ought to be the case in every court, because, Mr. Speaker, judgments in many of the States are liens against a man's property, and every man interested in business, and every man who lends money, sells goods, or transacts any business with any man in any community, should not only have an opportunity to examine the records of these mortgages and his own local court records, but, as far as may be, the convenience ought to be afforded him to examine the records of the federal court to see whether any given party has a judgment standing against it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to see the delegation from Indiana divided upon this bill. Coming from the southern part of my State, and feeling the absolute necessity for the passage of this bill, I am heartily in favor of it for several reasons.

In the first place, while I believe the convenience of attorneys should be considered, their convenience is not a matter of paramount importance; but I do especially believe that the convenience of private citizens or litigants should be considered. There is only one federal court in the entire State of Indiana presided over by one federal judge. It is true that cases can be tried in the federal court in any other place, but it is equally true that it is practically impossible to have them come to a trial upon them. I know this from personal experiences, that cases have been removed from the circuit court of the State of Indiana, in my own county, to the federal courts of the United States, and transferred to the city of Indianapolis, and then, upon petition, transferred to the city of Evansville, and we have had these cases hanging fire for two years and never been able to get them to trial. I believe that the report of the committee speaks the truth.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if it was the fault of the court that the cases could not be brought to trial?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; largely.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman kindly name the cases?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Denne against the Southern Railroad, and Johnson against the Southern Railroad.

Mr. LANDIS. Were they damage cases?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; for personal injury.

Mr. LANDIS. And the court refused a hearing to them?

Mr. COX of Indiana. We could never get the cases assigned for trial.

Mr. LANDIS. And the fault rested with the court?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Largely so; yes sir; because we could not get the court to stay the statutory length of time so that we could have a trial.

Mr. LANDIS. What was the date?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not recollect the exact date, but it was within the last three or four years. I live in the southern part of the State of Indiana, and the report sets out the fact that the distance is 364 miles from the city of Evansville to Indianapolis and return, that it is 326 miles from the city of Indianapolis to Hammond and return, and 238 miles from New Albany to Indianapolis and return. Every practical lawyer here will agree with me on this proposition, especially when you have a case before a jury in a court, either State or Federal, that depositions amount to but very little, and if you desire to win your case you will strain every nerve to get your witnesses to attend, to take them to the place of holding court, place them upon the witness stand, and submit them to the court and jury. And to travel from Evansville to Indianapolis and return, we can realize the enormous expense that there is attached to it. It is not proposed in this bill to provide that another federal judge be appointed, although that seems to be one of the objections waged against it. But I imagine that it would still be within the power of this House to disagree to an amendment, should an amendment of that kind be placed in the bill by the other branch of the legislative body. But, as my colleague from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] well stated, suppose it does create another court? What of it? In my judgment, the business of the State of Indiana requires it, and if the business of the federal court of the State of Indiana does demand another judge, let it come. It is a fact that in the past few years a large number of corporations have come into the State of Indiana, and are doing business in the State of Indiana, incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia, New Jersey, or some other Eastern States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Our time is pretty well taken up, but I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield to a question right on that point? Suppose a corporation should come into the State of Indiana, and had an agency in the State, would they be able to transfer their cases from the state courts to the federal court?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes, sir; a large number of them.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is not there a state statute which compels them to try any suit they have in the state courts?

Mr. COX of Indiana. It applies to foreign insurance companies' cases.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But does not that statute apply to all foreign corporations?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No. In cases of this kind affecting foreign insurance companies, you can sue them in the state court, and by virtue of this statute they are compelled to litigate their action in the state court, but this statute does not apply to all nonresident corporations.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What kind of corporations does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. COX of Indiana. The Southern Railway Company, which runs through my district, is one of them, and it is incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia. Under the federal law, when you sue for more than $2,000 and such a corporation as the Southern Railway Company is party defendant, you are instantaneously put into the federal court, if the defendant files a petition asking to have the case transferred. For that very reason many a lawyer in the State of Indiana to-day is taking the chance of his case being reversed in the supreme court of Indiana, by making another person a nominal defendant, so that he may try the case in the state courts; taking the chances, I say, on being reversed in the supreme court.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is the gentleman referring to damage suits?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Largely so.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not a fact that under the federal law the United States aids poor plaintiffs in damage suits by subpœnaing and paying the witnesses, and that that assistance is denied them in the state courts?

Mr. COX of Indiana. That has not been my experience in the federal court.

Mr. OVERSTREET. So that if the gentleman has a damage suit against this kind of a corporation he is benefited by the existing law and would be interfered with by the proposed law?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Not as I view it. I have not found that to be the federal practice, that the United States in civil suits pays the witnesses' fees, traveling expenses, and so forth. Upon the contrary, I have found that the parties themselves had to procure the attendance of the witness. I think that is the practice in the federal courts to-day. I have been shown this courtesy in the federal courts, that I have been permitted to prosecute a case on behalf of a plaintiff as a poor person, but that only goes to the extent that ordinarily obtains in our state practice, where the sheriff and clerk are compelled to do their duty without requiring their fees in advance.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to quote from a letter addressed to me by the president of the State Bar Association.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not like to have that taken out of my time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am going to answer that question—that is, the question between us as to what the law is.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman can take it out of his own time. I object to his taking it out of my time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is a very pertinent question, and I should like to answer it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In view of the fact that the State of Indiana has a large number of foreign corporations doing business in that State to-day, and in view of the fact that the last Congress passed a federal coemployees' liability bill, in my judgment will greatly increase the business in federal courts generally, including the federal court in my own State. In my judgment a suit brought under this bill in a state court will present a federal question, and if the amount involved is more than $2,000 a removal will lie from the state court to the federal court, and thereby increase the litigation in the federal court. Looking at it from this view point we should consult the convenience of the people, and this bill is squarely in the interest of the people at large in the State of Indiana. I am therefore for it and hope it will pass.

[The time of Mr. Cox of Indiana having expired, by unanimous consent he was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. JENKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have only just entered the Hall and that I did not hear the objections to this bill. It is distinctly in line with all legislation creating divisions of federal judicial districts in almost all the States. We have now in Indiana five places of holding the federal court, and the bill simply seeks to create around each one of the present places of holding court a division, and also adds as a place of holding court the city of Terre Haute, which is a large city, of over 50,000 population. Now, these divisions have aggregate populations running from 214,836 in the smallest up to 423,698 in the largest outside of Indianapolis. We still leave in the Indianapolis division a population of 980,196.

I want to call the attention of the House to these figures, because they show that there is in each of these districts to be created a population in excess of that in a number of individual States. There are some dozen States in this Union having no greater population than the divisions sought to be created by this bill.

I am living at Evansville, Ind., and so situated that if required to go to Indianapolis to try cases I must make a round trip of 364 miles. While it is true that we have a place of holding court at Evansville, it happens as a matter of practical application that very seldom is any court ever held in that city, although it is a city now of over 75,000 people, and in the proposed division surrounding it there were over 300,000 people, according to the census of 1900.

I do not care to take any position here reflecting upon the administration of justice in the State of Indiana in any way, but we know that with a centrally located point of doing business there is a tendency in the courts to prefer that point for the transaction of their business. We all know the feeling which accommodates itself to the personal convenience and comfort of any court who is trying cases, and it is not to be wondered at that frequently the trial of cases will take place in accordance with the personal comfort and convenience of the judge, and not that of litigants, even though it may be with the express consent of the litigants.

In Indiana there has been a great lessening of business in the last thirty years, and I think that can be accounted for on the ground of the extreme difficulty which litigants have, outside of the general neighborhood of Indianapolis, to get access to the federal court and have their cases tried.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not true that the business has actually decreased in the central part of the State?

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. The business in Indiana is less than it is in other States with a similar population, although these States have the same statute system which the gentleman refers to. In my opinion, and it is my opinion only, the reason why there is so little business is the extreme difficulty of getting access to the federal court.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Would not that increase the business at Indianapolis?

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. No.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not a fact that the business at Indianapolis and the surrounding counties has decreased?

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. I think not, although I am not familiar with the figures. I am satisfied that there is no such decrease in Indianapolis as there has been in other portions of the State, because it is almost all done at Indianapolis and in other portions of the State practically nothing.

Now, during this recess while at home a young fellow came to me and was talking about a fine that had been imposed upon him for some misdemeanor and to which he pleaded guilty. I presume the court in trying to give him as small a sentence as possible only fined him $10, but the costs attendant on taking him from Evansville to Indianapolis amounted to about $70.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin how many more speeches are to be made in favor of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Only one, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to my colleague [Mr. DIXON] two minutes.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the necessity of passing this bill, where a part or most of the argument in its support is that it will increase the litigation in that State. I think it is a matter of congratulation to the people of the State of Indiana that litigation has decreased in the last few years in the federal courts. As a matter of fact, in all cases where it is possible to try cases in the state courts our people very much prefer to try them there. The reports from the investigations that have been made show that the judge of the court, over his own signature, says that he is able to transact all the business in the federal court in the State of Indiana and have several months for leisure and recreation. In addition to that, this bill increases the expenses on account of holding additional grand juries in each of these districts. And an added reason for my opposition to this bill is the fact that almost certainly there will follow the passage of this bill an amendment in the Senate at this session, or the passage of another bill in the next Congress, providing for an additional judge of the federal court. When the present judge is compelled, if this bill passes, to go all over the districts remaining in these separate places, as required by this bill, he will soon become convinced that it is impossible to transact the business of the court at these respective places and remain for the length of time that this law designates, and the result will be that we will have another federal judge; and the people of the State of Indiana are satisfied with the number of federal officeholders in that State at this time. For that reason I shall vote against the passage of this bill. The happiness and prosperity of our people and the material development of the State are not dependent upon the amount of business transacted in the federal court. No present necessity existing for the passage of this bill, I hope the same will be defeated. There is no public demand for its passage.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I now yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the ground has been so admirably covered by my colleague [Mr. OVERSTREET] that I feel that nothing effective can be added in the way of opposition to this bill by anything that I might say. There is no demand for this legislation. The keynote to the entire situation is struck by my colleague [Mr. DIXON] when he states that litigation in Indiana is on the decrease, and it matters not how many United States court bills may be passed, they will not have the effect of perceptibly increasing litigation in that State. Not only in the federal court has litigation decreased, but in our state courts, in our circuit courts, has litigation decreased. In the county of White, immediately north of the county in which I live, three of the leading members of that bar—one of them at one time president of the State Bar Association—within the last six months have packed their books and office furniture and moved away, I believe one of them to Hammond, Ind., and the other two to Chicago—simply because there was not any business in White County. There is very little law business in Carroll County or any other county in Indiana that has not a large city as its county seat. Litigation is on the decrease throughout the length and breadth of the State of Indiana, and while there might have been some excuse for another judge in Indiana some twenty to twenty-five years ago, there is no excuse for it to-day, and the object of this bill will become apparent when it returns from the Senate. I am not a lawyer. I do live on a farm, and I will say to my colleague, the gentleman who suggested my avocation when at home [Mr. CHANEY], that if this bill passes and this added expense is shouldered on the people he is likely to hear from the farmers when they go to the polls.

Mr. Speaker, without desiring to trespass upon the patience of the House, feeling that every phase of the question as represented by the opposition to this measure has been admirably presented, I am willing to leave the question to the judgment of those on this floor. There is no demand for this legislation save from a few lawyers who are interested. If this bill becomes a law, it will hamper and hinder litigation. It will work a hardship on those charged with violating the law. It will postpone rather than advance the trial of causes. It will entail a greater expense than would follow the creation of an additional district with an additional judge. The Department of Justice has recommended against it, and Judge Anderson, whose integrity I have never heard questioned, and whose eminent fairness on the bench is a matter of pride and congratulation in Indiana, would be put to an expense and inconvenience that would amount to little less than a hardship. I contend that no reason for the passage of this bill has been given, the responsibility for which does not rest with lawyers and litigants; and the fact that long terms of court are not now held at the points specified away from Indianapolis is due to the action of parties to the suits and not to the court. The passage of this bill would be little less than an outrage. There is no demand for it. There is no excuse for it. It is illogical, unwise, unfair, and indefensible. I can not believe that in the face of the showing that has been made this House will pass the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I shall say but just a word, merely for the benefit of those who may not have been present on the floor when I spoke against this measure a while ago. This bill is opposed by the district judge of the State, by the Attorney-General of the United States, by the president of the State Bar Association. It is not needed because of any lack of administration of the law; it is not needed because there is a decided decrease in the business of the federal courts. My colleague, Judge FOSTER, of Evansville, mentions the distance that must be traveled between Evansville and Indianapolis. He has some reason for his argument, and if this were to create a division of which Evansville were to be the center, I might have some difficulty in inducing the Members of this House to oppose the legislation, but it is an omnibus bill which takes in five other localities, none of which has the same argument advanced by my colleague, Judge FOSTER. If the failure of litigants, with their witnesses, to have justice administered at the federal court under existing practice was causing a decrease in the business, why has there not been a corresponding increase at the center, where the court is mostly now held? Gentlemen must admit that the decrease is general throughout the State, and as my colleague [Mr. LANDIS] has just stated, it is not alone in the federal court, but in the state courts as well. There can be no excuse for this House to-day to pass this bill. We have urged our opposition from every standpoint of the merits and demerits of the matter, and now I shall rest it with the vote of the House, confidently believing that the Members who have heard the debate will agree with those of us who oppose the legislation and defeat the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I live in the Thirteenth Indiana District, and I shall vote in opposition to this bill for three reasons; one, because I do not believe that the interests of the State demand these divisions of the federal court sessions and the incidental additional expense that is to be heaped upon the public. Another is that according to the provisions of this bill, so far as the district that I represent is concerned, it is objectionable, as the court therein will be held in the city of Hammond, which is located in the extreme northwest corner of the State, so remote from practically all of the counties of the district that it is less convenient to go to Hammond than it is to go to Indianapolis. There is another reason why I believe this bill should be defeated, and that is the one that has been advanced—that the purpose of it all is to get additional judges. In Indiana there is a general protest against the increase of courts, and of public expenses generally.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I have heard it stated two or three times that the purpose of this bill is to get an additional judge. How is that understood? The friends of the bill are not asking for an additional judge or expecting one. How is that known?

Mr. BARNHART. It is surmised.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Oh. The gentleman got that from the gentleman from the ninth district.

Mr. BARNHART. No; I heard it before I came here and before I was elected. It has been the talk in Indiana. Public rumor has it that there shall be an additional judge or two in the State of Indiana a little later, if this bill passes, and I do not believe that even the legal fraternity of the State is demanding anything of the kind. Court business in our State is decreasing, and court expenses should not increase.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that, if the judge of the court were around in these divisions holding court as specified in this bill, it would be necessary for some one to stay in Indianapolis to attend to the routine business. Is not that true?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, I think so, and more than that, if the judge must travel about on the circuit, the one judge we now have would not usually be present where he is wanted, and as the federal litigation that mostly comes up in the counties throughout the State demands very prompt attention, being generally of an injunction or criminal nature, under those circumstances a court for my district, located at Hammond, would avail very little, because we would only have a session there, as I understand it, two months each year—one in May and the other in October. The bill in its present provisions would locate our northern Indiana district court so far remote from the center of the district that Indianapolis is almost as convenient, and a central court in almost continuous session there would be more advantageous to litigants and much less expensive to the public. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY].

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, not only is it 364 miles from Evansville to Indianapolis in a round trip, but it is also 226 miles from New Albany to Indianapolis, and from Hammond it is 326 miles, and from Fort Wayne it is 236 miles. The distance for persons having business in United States courts is of itself of very great inconvenience. There is no reason in the world if the judge holding court at Indianapolis is able to take care of all the business that will come into the United States court at that place, why he should not also be able to handle all the business, although he should go to these various places and hold court. Now, I want to say in reference to this insinuation that the whole purpose of this bill is to create another judge for the Indiana jurisdiction of the federal court, that it is a thing only intimated by some persons in some newspaper or other, or from some person who is supposed to bring it in to oppose this bill. It is an incidental matter which has no relation to the question here at all. It is not in the bill. If the time should come in the future, as I would be delighted to know it should come, that it would be necessary for another judge to be appointed in Indiana, we should have it done; but there is no necessity for anticipation of it now, and I know of no possibility or probability of such a thing in many years to come. I believe Judge Anderson can take care of all the business that comes to the federal courts of Indiana, although he may be required to go to these various places to hold his court. Now we have the opposition from one more Member [Mr. BARNHART] from our State to-day than we supposed we had. We knew there were four Members of our delegation who were opposed to this proposition, but we understood the rest of them all favored it; but one thing we do know is that there is a demand for this legislation by the people of the State of Indiana.

It comes from Fort Wayne. It comes from the people surrounding Fort Wayne. It comes from Hammond; from the people who have access to the city of Hammond. It comes from New Albany and the environments of that city, and the people request that this bill pass. The opposition principally comes from Indianapolis. Now, there has been added to the places where the court is authorized by law to hold sessions the city of Terre Haute, to accommodate that city and the counties immediately adjacent to the city of Terre Haute. Terre Haute is an important railroad center. It is a great commercial center. It is so located that, while it is not so far from Indianapolis as these other places, the business centering in the city of Terre Haute has possibly as much litigation in the United States court as Indianapolis itself has, and it would not be long until the division of the court held at Terre Haute would be one of the very important branches of the federal court in our State.

Mr. ADAIR. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CHANEY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman has said he does not believe the purpose of the bill is to create another federal judge. If this bill should pass the House and go over to the Senate and come back amended, providing for another federal judge, would the gentleman from Indiana vote in favor of that amendment?

Mr. CHANEY. I would oppose the amendment, but I have not the least fear that such an amendment will be made over there.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman would oppose it?

Mr. CHANEY. I would oppose it, but I have no fear that any such amendment is contemplated or any idea that any such amendment as that will be considered at the other end of this Capitol. I simply say, and desire to emphasize what has been said by my colleague [Mr. HOLLIDAY], that this is a proposition to give to the people of the State the convenience of a federal court. We are entitled to have divisions in the federal court in Indiana like the people of other States. There is no question but what a number of cases would have been brought in the United States court in the division in which Terre Haute is located if there were opportunity to try the cases at that city.

It is so at Hammond, it is so at Fort Wayne, it is so at Evansville, and it is so at New Albany.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHANEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. What is the purpose of the bill in locating one of these courts at Hammond, a city half of which lies within the State of Illinois, and is bounded on the north by Lake Michigan, practically entirely out of the district for which it is intended to be used?

Mr. CHANEY. I will say to my colleague that it is one of the places now provided by law for holding the United States court, and we simply now want it made certain that the United States court will be held there.

Mr. BARNHART. Without any consideration for the convenience of the people in the northern part of the State?

Mr. CHANEY. For the convenience of the people. I want to say to the gentleman that the Pennsylvania Railroad runs in the right direction to carry the people up to Hammond.

Mr. BARNHART. The Pennsylvania Railroad does not cover all the northern side of Indiana.

Mr. CHANEY. The Monon Railroad runs that way.

Mr. BARNHART. That runs north and south.

Mr. CHANEY. It is positively an advantage also to have the United States court held in some convenient location with reference to lines between the States, because disputes arise between people in different States, and the questions involved are often such questions as the United States court ought to consider.

Mr. BARNHART. It would be much better, though, that the court be 20 miles from Hammond in Illinois, or have that court established midway in the State, east and west, would it not?

Mr. CHANEY. I should think the convenience of the people of Indiana, and even of Illinois, would be very much better subserved by having the sessions of the United States court held at that place. We simply want to make this bill complete what arrangements were originally made about holding the United States courts in certain places throughout the State. We have simply added to the places already fixed for holding court the city of Terre Haute, which has become not only a railroad center but a great commercial center. These business interests have become so great as to entitle the people who live in Terre Haute and who belong to the environments of Terre Haute to have a chance to go into the United States court to try their causes when it shall be to their interests to go there. I hope, indeed, that the membership of this House will vote to pass this bill, so that the people of the State of Indiana shall have the conveniences of the people of other States with respect to United States courts.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, now, under an arrangement perfectly satisfactory to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 32.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the House refused to order the bill to a third reading.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be laid upon the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 21.

So the bill was ordered to be laid upon the table.

VESSELS SEIZED IN THE BERING SEA.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill S. 390.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 390) to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit to determine in equity the rights of American citizens under the award of the Bering Sea arbitration of Paris and to render judgment thereon.

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction in equity is hereby conferred upon the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit to examine and determine the rights of American citizens under the award of the Paris arbitration concerning the jurisdiction of Bering Sea.

SEC. 2. That all American citizens whose rights were affected by said award may submit to the court their claims thereunder, and the court shall enter judgment thereon. Claims not submitted within two years from the passage of this act shall thereafter be forever barred.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "in equity," in line 3.

Strike out the word "shall," in line 10, and substitute therefor the word "may."

Add at the end of line 10 the following: "Provided, however, That nothing in said award shall preclude the United States from interposing any defense which might be made if there were no such award or arbitration."

Amend the title by striking out the words "in equity."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill can not be called up on a call of the committees, and that it belongs to the Union Calendar, not subject to be called up on a call of the committees. The bill confers on the circuit court of the ninth district authority to examine and determine the right of American citizens under the award of the Paris arbitration concerning the jurisdiction of Bering Sea, which we know refers to the Bering Sea seal difficulties. Section 2 provides that all American citizens whose rights were affected by said award may submit to the court their claims thereunder, and the court may enter judgment thereon.

Now, it is conceded that under the existing law there is no liability on the part of the Government to these claimants. Under this bill the claimants will have authority to appear and file their claims in the circuit court of California and obtain judgment upon those claims. The obtaining of a judgment under such circumstances creates a liability against the Government. The rule, paragraph 3, Rule XXIII provides that certain propositions shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House, and says, including those, "all matters or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people."

Now, giving to a court jurisdiction to enter judgment against the United States creates and involves a tax or charge upon the people, because when such a judgment is entered in the court against the United States that judgment must be met and paid. Hence, where claimants have no authority to obtain a judgment, no authority under the law to maintain their claims, under this bill they are given not merely authority to have their claims determined, but authority to have a judgment entered against the United States upon the claim. Further than that, the rule also provides that there shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union any bill referring any claim to the Court of Claims. While this bill in terms does not refer this claim to the Court of Claims, it refers these claims to the circuit court of the ninth circuit. In practice, in theory, in reason, there is no distinction between referring a claim to the Court of Claims, so called, in Washington, and referring that claim to a circuit court which acts as a court of claims. So that it seems to me under either provision of the rules the bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House. This is a reference practically to the Court of Claims of these claims and authorizes that court to enter a judgment upon the claims, which makes a charge upon the Treasury. It may be said that it is purely speculative as to whether any judgment will be entered upon these claims; and yet it is admitted by the Government that such claims exist; it is admitted by the Government that under the provisions of this bill there must be a judgment for some amount entered against the Government. These claims are for vessels seized by the Government. The Government claimed the right to seize them. Under this bill that right is denied. It accepts the Paris award as law, and judgment must be entered against the Government, which amounts to a tax upon the Treasury.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as this point of order is concerned, I am inclined to believe that this bill is properly upon the House Calendar, and that it can be considered under the call of committees. I disagree with the contention of the gentleman from Illinois, that if a judgment is entered in these cases it must be met. It does not follow that because any court of the United States renders a judgment against the United States that any subsequent Congress is bound to appropriate money sufficient to liquidate that judgment. So far as this bill is concerned there is absolutely no charge whatever upon the Treasury. It simply says to the court: You may try the case, you can hear the claimants, and if you are satisfied that they have a legal, meritorious claim against the United States that judgment shall be entered in their favor for the amount found. That does not create a charge on the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that operates as a charge upon the Treasury? The language of the rule is not "create" but "involve."

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman that it certainly does not involve a charge as yet, because it can not be a charge upon the Treasury until Congress has voted to pay the amount.

As far as the speculative suggestion is concerned, it is possible that the court may find against the claimants. Then it can not be a charge upon the Treasury. If the acts of these sealers were unlawful, then they have no standing in that court.

It is perfectly immaterial to me, as far as I am concerned. This question must have been carefully considered when the reference was made. It was referred to the House Calendar, and I think it was properly so referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair notices the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII provides—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people—shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

And so forth—

There have been many rulings under this clause of the rule. Where claims are referred to the Court of Claims in express language, they shall receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole. This, however, as the gentleman from Illinois says, is not a reference to the Court of Claims, but is a reference to the circuit court. It is not necessary for the Chair to announce what the ruling might be if that were the only point of order, but the second point of order is that the bill provides—

And the court shall enter judgment thereon.

Now, under the precedents such a provision has, so far as the Chair has been able to find, been uniformly held to subject the proposed legislation, or the bill, to the operation of clause 3 of Rule XXIII, and requires the consideration of the same to be in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is true, you may say, that Congress is not bound to appropriate, nor is Congress bound to appropriate for the public debt, or the interest on the same, or to pay any judgment. It is in the power of Congress to refuse to pay, but in the construction of the rule, so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain, it has never been assumed that Congress would resort to repudiation. Of course, the class of claims that are referred to the courts from time to time for investigation and report to Congress for its consideration present another question, but this provides for absolute adjustment, and therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary yields the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

EMBASSIES, LEGATIONS, AND CONSULAR BUILDINGS ABROAD.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, we have been under the call of committees for more than an hour, and as I understand the rule, it is permissible for me now to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. LOWDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule that motion is in order.

Mr. LOWDEN. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21491) providing for the purchase or erection of embassies, legations, and consular buildings abroad.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, one hour having expired since the call of committees began. The motion is in order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I supposed the call of committees was in order.

The SPEAKER. We are under the order of the call of committees, but under the rule, having been under that order for sixty minutes, it is a matter of privilege for any gentleman to move to take up a bill on the Union Calendar. After this bill is disposed of, or if the committee refuses to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, the call of the committees will proceed; but if the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, then this bill would have to be disposed of by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union before the call of committees would proceed further.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would it be in order to move to amend by continuing the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. One amendment under the rule is in order to take up another bill in lieu of this.

Mr. STEENERSON. On the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. My bill is not on the Union Calendar. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire what committee this bill came from?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then I would like to inquire if that bill should not have been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It provides for the erection of public buildings, not in this country, it is true, but public buildings belonging to the United States. I should like a ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether that bill has been properly reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, the point raised by the gentleman from Missouri should have been made before the bill was reported out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs by raising the question of an improper reference. I claim that it can not be raised at this time.

Mr. MANN. I take it that whatever committee the bill should have been referred to it makes no difference now as long as it is a public bill. On a private bill a Member makes his own reference. The reference of a public bill is made by the Speaker and the reference is good unless the House sees fit to change it. The gentleman from Missouri had a right any morning to make a motion to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs and have that bill transferred to his committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to clause 22, rule 11, which provides:

To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

If any morning after the reading of the Journal a motion had been made by the direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to correct a reference under the rule, whatever the House might have done in such a case it is unnecessary to inquire. But here is a bill that seems to have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and by that committee reported, and is now upon the Union Calendar, and being a public bill under the rule the Chair is of the opinion that when once reported from that committee it is too late to raise the question of jurisdiction. The rule is otherwise as to private bills.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. LOWDEN to go into Committee of the Whole, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LOWDEN) there were 30 ayes and 16 noes.

So the motion prevailed.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21491) providing for the purchase or erection of embassy, legation, and consular buildings abroad.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and to alter, repair, and furnish the said buildings, suitable buildings for this purpose to be either purchased or erected as to the Secretary of State may seem best, and all buildings so acquired for the diplomatic service shall be used both as the residences of diplomatic officers and for the offices of the diplomatic establishment: Provided, That hereafter not more than $1,000,000 shall be appropriated for the purposes above set forth in any one fiscal year.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase, erection, repair, alteration, and furnishing of embassies, legations, and consulates, the said sum to be expended within the purposes of this act, at the discretion of the Secretary of State, not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure consular and court buildings at Shanghai and Yokohama, and not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure embassy buildings at Berlin and Mexico City.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it will be necessary to have a very full discussion of this bill at the present time, because at each session for a number of years there has been a very full presentation of the needs which this bill is intended to provide for. We are the only great country that so far has not embarked upon the policy of owning our own embassy and legation buildings in the principal capitals of the rest of the world. Every one of our ambassadors and ministers, so far as I am advised, has found that his service was greatly diminished in its value to this country because of the policy that we have so far pursued.

A number of bills have been introduced, and this bill is as simple and modest as any that has come before the House, and provides in general that at this time an appropriation of $1,000,000 be made to make a beginning, and also it authorizes future construction, so that the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Committee on Public Buildings, if the contention of my friend from Missouri is sustained, can incorporate not to exceed $1,000,000 in each year for the purpose of having constructed embassies and legations without that provision in the diplomatic appropriation bill or the Committee on Public Buildings being subject to the point of order.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, as one of the minority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I wish to add a few words to what the gentleman from Illinois has said about this bill. Our side of the committee is unanimous in support of the bill, and personally I have the strongest reasons for hoping that it will pass. It is, in some measure, the result of the discussion in the House last winter and several years previous to that, when the conduct of our foreign representatives was somewhat under fire. It is the general impression in the United States to-day that certain diplomatic posts are only within the reach of very rich men. One of the solutions of this trouble that is alleged to exist is the bill now before the committee. Gradually and modestly this bill proposes to acquire homes and residences for our foreign representatives. It will no longer be necessary for an American ambassador going abroad to scramble around and try to acquire an expensive residence in a foreign capital.

The Government should provide a residence for him and thereby remove the discrimination between men of different-sized purses going abroad to represent this country. Last winter a certain cause celèbre arose in one of the principal countries of Europe which I think could not have arisen had we at that time owned our embassy in the capital of that country. This bill will remove a great many disagreeable features now attendant upon taking a post abroad. It will put it within the power of any man, however humble his means, to represent our country worthily in any foreign capital. This bill does not ask for a very large appropriation. The Government should go at this matter gradually. We should not rush into the real estate markets of all the countries of the world and make wild bids for embassy buildings. We should go at it slowly, and it seems to me that this bill will accomplish that purpose.

I believe that the dignity of our country to-day requires that our representatives abroad should be properly housed. Until within very recent times the American people have not seemed to attach any very great importance, except in times of national crises, to the representation of our country abroad. We have been more interested in building up our own internal affairs than we have in our foreign service, but it seems that to-day we must take our place as one of the first of the world powers; and in order to do that, without any purpose of aggrandizement or aggression, but merely to assert our proper place and dignity among the nations, it is fitting, in my opinion, that our country should house its representatives in a manner becoming the dignity of the United States. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. BARTHOLDT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I would like to ask whether or not the Government now pays any rent for the homes of our foreign representatives?

Mr. HARRISON. I believe the Government pays in some countries where it is very difficult to acquire a home.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman any idea about how much rent our Government pays annually for that purpose?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not recall how much it is. I have no doubt that the gentleman in charge of the bill can tell.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman any idea or any data to give the House how much this will eventually cost the Government of the United States, provided we embark upon this policy of purchasing homes?

Mr. HARRISON. We have no idea how much it will cost eventually, but at the rate of $1,000,000 a year I think that four or five or six buildings a year can probably be acquired.

Mr. MADDEN. For how many years would the gentleman be in favor of having the million dollars appropriated each year?

Mr. HARRISON. Until we acquire an embassy, legation, or consular building in countries where our dignity requires it, and where it is impossible for our representatives to acquire a residence.

Mr. MADDEN. This does not place any limit on the number of years.

Mr. HARRISON. No.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not place any limit on the cost of the building.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not place any limit on the number of places in which we are to acquire sites.

Mr. HARRISON. The limit is the discretion of the House each year when it comes to pass upon the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it not leave it discretionary with the Secretary of State to decide?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but upon us rests the responsibility for appropriating the money.

Mr. MADDEN. This leaves it entirely discretionary with the Secretary of State?

Mr. HARRISON. No; on the contrary, our committee has selected the four sites for which we are now appropriating money.

Mr. MADDEN. Beyond that there is no selection made?

Mr. HARRISON. No; but I think that our committee or the Committee on Public Lands is sufficiently able to make the selection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask in what part of the bill there is any limitation made as to the amount to be expended at any one place. I see that it is provided that this million dollars shall be at four places.

Mr. HARRISON. We have not attempted to limit the expenditure at any one place.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Nor for any one building?

Mr. HARRISON. No; but for four buildings we have limited the cost.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does this limit it to these four places, the total cost not to exceed a million dollars?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I doubt that very much. A million dollars is appropriated to commence at four places, and that is all that could be used until further action by Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But, in my judgment, they could use a million at any one of the places and then the next year come in for another place.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman has a very low opinion of the intelligence and discretion of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all; but I know when you authorize the commencement of four buildings that the Secretary of State or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy may not consider himself as limited in their total cost by the first appropriation. For instance, let us take the War College down here. That was begun when the present Secretary of State was Secretary of War, and I want to say of him that I regard him as one of the ablest of all our public men and one of the best, but as great a man as he, as great a lawyer and as great a public servant as he, when we appropriated $400,000 for the War College, entered into plans that required us to appropriate practically $400,000 more. I do not know that he is to blame for it, but why would not the same rule apply in this case?

If you say we will give you a million dollars a year, it does not mean the million of dollars is to complete it all at the start, but if you want another million dollars the next year, give them another, and so on until completed.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman will pardon me, but I yielded for a question, and he has asked three or four questions. I am sorry that his experience with the War Department has been so unfortunate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is the same with all the departments.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman will examine the bill, he will see that each year Congress will say whether it will appropriate the money or not. We will give authority to the Secretary of State to expend the money; he is not to give us directions to do it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When the gentleman yields the floor——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Did not the chairman recognize me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman, but understood the gentleman yielded the floor to allow the gentleman from New York to ask a question. To whom does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not take exception to the question, as he seemed to do to the question of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman is very much mistaken in thinking I took exception to the question of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether he seriously believed that Congress can pass an act providing that there shall be appropriated not to exceed one million in any fiscal year hereafter for a certain purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. The limitation is upon the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. No; the limitation is upon Congress. It says that hereafter that not more than $1,000,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose set forth, and so forth, and I wondered if the intelligence to which the gentleman referred had been applied to this thing, whether he believed we can say that the next Congress shall appropriate any more or less than a million dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. We can express our ideas as a legacy to the next Congress.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman admits that he has no reason for it, and that there is no limitation on the amount that might be appropriated under this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not admit any such thing. The gentleman from Illinois is putting a statement in my mouth which I did not make.

Mr. MANN. Then I retract it, and I will ask the gentleman to state what his position is with reference to that provision in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will permit, I will attempt to explain——

Mr. HARRISON. The purpose of the organic law which this bill attempts to establish is that a point of order can not be raised by the gentleman or some other equally zealous public servant against such an appropriation in an annual appropriation bill up to the amount of a million dollars. Beyond that it does not attempt to limit anything.

Mr. MANN. The probabilities are this would not affect the point of order at all; this is an illegal provision.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman stated a moment ago in his remarks that his main reason for wanting this bill passed was that we had reached a point where we could not send any but rich representatives abroad.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the gentleman is mistaken. I said that was the general impression throughout the country; I did not say it was a fact, but that it is the general impression that this is true.

Mr. MACON. Now, if this bill becomes a law and we appropriate this money to build these residences for ambassadors or ministers abroad, does not the gentleman think that $250,000 will get such a house that a poor man would not be able to live in?

Mr. HARRISON. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that we have considered that question and we believe the salary which is now given to our ambassadors is sufficient to enable them to dwell in any residence which we purchase for them under this language.

Mr. MACON. But a poor man could not live in a $250,000 house.

Mr. HARRISON. We give him enough——

Mr. MACON. Is it not a fact that the committee purposes to erect houses that only millionaires or rich representatives can live in?

Mr. HARRISON. It is not a fact; the gentleman is mistaken. It is a fact we intend to erect only such residences as our representatives should live in suitable to their position and dignity on the allowances and salary given them by this Government.

Mr. MACON. Where have we a representative, except the President of the United States, who is to-day living in a $250,000 house in the United States?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I think if the gentleman would cast his eye around he might find several of them in Washington.

Mr. MACON. I do not know any of them.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not enter into a controversy with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. MACON. Does not the gentleman believe that if our representatives here can live in houses of less consequence than those we purchase for $250,000, we can afford to let our representatives to Shanghai, China, live in a house that will cost less than that?

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the gentleman has brought out the point of China. The people of China frequently estimate the value of representatives of other powers entirely with their eyes. The representatives of our country over there, having been wretchedly housed, have less influence there for that very reason than they should have and the dignity of this country entitles them to. China is one of the particular countries where we should house our representatives properly in order to create an impression upon the Chinese people that will enable us to have a proper standing with them. And that is one of the cases for which we propose to appropriate now.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman believe that it is best and wise to cultivate a class of people that are not able to judge any country except through their eyes?

Mr. HARRISON. I believe the gentleman will agree with me that if those people are so unfortunate as to form their judgment solely through their eyes, we had better go ahead and meet the conditions as they exist.

Mr. MACON. Does not the gentleman think it would be a wiser policy to appropriate this in order to have a missionary sent to China or some other place?

Mr. HARRISON. I am unaware that there is any such project before this House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman a question or two. I will state that I am very much in favor of erecting buildings in Washington City in order to take care of the public business. But who is to select these sites, who is to investigate the titles, and is the property to be bought and no report made to Congress before it is bought?

Mr. HARRISON. The presentation of the question is to be made by the committee of the Congress that asks for the appropriation. Suggestions are originally to be made by the Secretary of State to that committee, whether it will be the Committee on Foreign Affairs or on Public Buildings.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who is to select the sites?

Mr. HARRISON. The persons who are best equipped to do it, namely, our representatives abroad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to make that selection finally without report to Congress?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; we are not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to investigate the title before buying the land?

Mr. HARRISON. The Secretary of State will do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are they going to report that back to Congress before it is made final?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I do not see why it should be reported, either.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To what committee?

Mr. HARRISON. Probably the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does this bill provide that the Foreign Affairs Committee shall be the building committee?

Mr. HARRISON. For foreign affairs.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think a matter of that importance should not be viewed by any other committee of the House?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman does not wish to suggest that the Foreign Affairs Committee is not capable of handling subjects of this importance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I quite agree that that committee is a committee of intelligence and that every committee of this House is a committee of intelligence, and I am sure the members of the Public Buildings Committee know more about public buildings and the value of them than I do. What experience has the gentleman had in buying lots of this kind or building houses? Has the gentleman ever bought or built one in this country?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman has had experience in this and the old country, I presume, and I do not say this facetiously at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I could be recognized for three or four minutes, I would like it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, lest the purpose of the parliamentary inquiry I submitted to the Speaker a little while ago may be misunderstood, I desire to state to the House that I am heartily in favor of the purpose of this bill. As one who travels abroad once in a while, I am deeply impressed with the necessity of this country maintaining its own embassy buildings in foreign countries. Many a time, Mr. Chairman, as an American citizen, I felt humiliated when I was compelled to climb up two, three, and four flights of stairs for the purpose of reaching the American minister or consul in foreign countries. I am sure every Member of this House who is proud of his country would feel exactly the same way. I think it is time that this country should do what other smaller and poorer countries have done long before us, namely, to erect buildings for our foreign representatives. But when I say that I am in favor of the purpose of this bill, I can not say that I am in favor of this particular bill. I do not know, as I have had but a few minutes to examine it, what the exact effect of it will be.

When we frame a bill in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds we always provide a limit of cost and always authorize an appropriation for a specific purpose. Not one of these conditions is complied with in this bill. In other words, it seems to me that if this bill became law as it reads now, it would simply transfer an authority which should be exercised by the legislative branch of this Government to the executive branch, leaving it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of State as to what buildings should be erected and at what cost.

These points should be discussed here by the Members of this House and carefully considered by the committee which has charge of matters of this kind.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman, I think, stated that the executive branch of this Government would be authorized to make these appropriations——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No.

Mr. HARRISON (continuing). To acquire these sites only so far as Congress authorized it each year, and never more than $1,000,000 unless Congress desires.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That simply means that the Secretary of State would send a statement to the Committee on Appropriations that so and so much is necessary for such and such a purpose; and under this bill the Committee on Appropriations has no discretion to say to the Secretary that either the purpose or the amount of an appropriation is contrary to their opinion. Consequently, in a way, you transfer authority now exercised by this House, and which ought to be exercised by this House, to an executive department.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman tell me who he thinks is better qualified to make recommendations, and if he does not think this is sufficiently guarded when it provides that the Secretary of State may only acquire such sites as may have been appropriated for by Congress each year?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I answer that, merely judging by past experience, in many instances where this same procedure was followed by the House, namely, when a statement from an executive department came to the Committee on Appropriations relating to building matters, mistakes have been made. That committee is overwhelmed with business and has neither the necessary time nor the necessary detailed knowledge of building matters, hence in many instances grave mistakes have been made because the committee which should have had charge of such legislation has been ignored. Therefore I shall always insist, and I insist now, that this bill should have been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but since this objection comes too late, I waive that point. I admit that the point should have been made before this time. It should have been made in the form of a motion by the committee to refer this bill to the committee of which I have the honor to be a member.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. No one in the House has had the experience of the gentleman in regard to public buildings. What, in the opinion of the gentleman, would be the effect, if we started to build public buildings in the United States, simply to appropriate a lump sum, to be expended at the discretion of some officer? Would the result be extravagance or economy?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The result, in my judgment, would be greater extravagance in the service than we have had heretofore.

Mr. MANN. Well, if we should adopt the practice of appropriating a lump sum, to be expended nominally, in the terms of the bill, by the Secretary of State, but really by one of the clerks in that department, what would be the effect in that expenditure? Would the result be extravagance or economy?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In answer to that question I am glad to say that I have the highest respect for the good judgment and the integrity of the gentleman, whoever he may be, now or in the future, that occupies the dignified position of Secretary of State.

I would be willing to trust his judgment in many matters, but when it comes to the appropriation of money for public buildings it seems to me Congress itself should exercise its constitutional right not only of determining the objects for which the money is appropriated, but also of limiting the cost for each particular purpose; and that condition, as I said before, has not been complied with in this bill. I repeat that there is probably no gentleman connected with any branch of the Government who is more competent to judge of the needs of this service than the Secretary of State, and he could give valuable advice to the Committee on Appropriations, or to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on this subject. Certainly his recommendations would be heeded, I am sure, by either of those committees; but I say the matter should be kept within the power and jurisdiction of this House, and should not be handed over to any executive department or any official, no matter how great and dignified he may be.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not read the bill, but is the gentleman certain that the estimates for these buildings would be referred to the Committee on Appropriations? Would they not go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that has control and jurisdiction of matters relating to embassies, legations, and consulates?

Mr. MANN. They would go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That would make the matter more objectionable, if that should be so. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a measure of some importance, and I think it is somewhat misunderstood by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. I shall therefore ask the attention of the House very briefly to a measure which I believe will receive the support of a large majority of this House, if it is properly understood.

We plan two things: First, that it shall be the policy of this Government to own in foreign countries proper buildings for the housing of its diplomatic and consular officials. This bill does not provide for that. It appropriates simply $1,000,000. If Congress does not desire in the future to appropriate another cent, not another cent can ever be spent for this purpose. If this bill is passed, the Secretary of State will be authorized to expend $1,000,000; that, and that alone. But, Mr. Chairman, it is the belief of the committee reporting this bill, and I think it is the belief of the House of Representatives, that the policy which we thus undertake may be profitably followed. We desire two things; one, as has been well said by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], that the ministers and ambassadors of the United States shall be properly housed in a way that is fitting the dignity of the nation we represent. There is another thing of no less importance. This bill provides that the money appropriated shall be spent, one-half in the purchase of embassies and one-half in the purchase of consular buildings in the East. If we wish our trade to extend, as was well stated by my friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON], if we wish the open door in China and Japan to be of any value, if we wish the trade of the United States to enter the greatest market which the world can now show not already taken possession of, then it is necessary that our representatives shall find in the East what they can not find except by our appropriations, proper buildings in which they may do the work; buildings, as was well said by the gentleman from New York, which any native of the East, any Japanese or Chinaman, may feel, when he looks at them, represent the power of the nation behind the official.

In some remarks which I had the honor to make before this House a year ago I had here photographs which I wish I had to-day, in which were exhibited, side by side, in the city of Shanghai, one of the great centers of Chinese trade, the little broken-down house in which the representative of the United States of America had to be found by any Chinese merchant who had business to do with this country, who wished to have his invoiced property certified, and the building which the German Government—not a government which wastes its money—in the interest of the extension of German trade in the East, had provided for the use of its representatives there. I said then what I can say now: Is it strange that with that object lesson picturing side by side the attention given by two great governments to the means by which their trade may be developed, the fact exists, which we all know and regret, that the trade of Germany has increased in China with greater rapidity than the trade of the United States?

Now one word about the form of this bill. My friend from Missouri may be right, I hope he is wrong, in thinking that even worse results will come if the choice of these buildings is left to the Committee on Foreign Affairs than to the Committee on Appropriations, but I know that he is wrong in his understanding of the bill. There is here no appropriation and no legislation by which the Secretary of State can involve this Government to the tune of one dollar except the million dollars which we appropriate to-day. If we pass any legislation in the future it will be reported, I think, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which my friend seems to distrust, and if any appropriation is made it will regulate the manner in which the money shall be expended.

It will say, for instance, next year, assuming that to be the judgment of the House of Representatives, that we appropriate $1,000,000, and in that million dollars three hundred and fifty thousand shall be spent in the purchase of a building which is offered for sale to this Government in the city of Paris. It will say that of the sum appropriated two or three hundred thousand dollars shall be used specifically as provided for in another bill on the calendar of the House, a bill the place of which is taken by this bill, for the purchase of certain consular buildings in certain specified places in Japan and China. In reference to each and every purchase the House of Representatives can, the House of Representatives should, and the House of Representatives will say how much shall be expended and where it shall be expended. Do we not say so in this bill? Has my friend from Missouri any doubt as to where the money would go?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. PERKINS. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider that the language in this bill would authorize the carrying in the diplomatic appropriation bill of items for the purchase of embassies abroad?

Mr. PERKINS. If those items were approved by a majority of the House of Representatives, yes. If they were disapproved by the House of Representatives, no. Just like any other bill; like appropriations in the bills in the committee of which my friend is a member.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell the House whether it would be possible on an appropriation bill, the diplomatic appropriation bill, to do anything other than designate the amount of money and to limit the expenditure? Could you affirmatively legislate as to how the money was to be expended?

Mr. PERKINS. Surely. The legislative appropriation bill provides that there shall be paid to the ambassador at Berlin the sum of $17,500. Under that authority that money is paid to him, and it can be paid in no other way and to no other person, nor can it be paid without that authority. In precisely the same way, with the same legal effect, with the same express language, the bill would say the Secretary of State was authorized to expend for an embassy at Berlin for the Government of the United States the sum of $300,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but just a step further. Would you be able to designate the character of the building or to do anything other than to limit the amount and then to say that no greater sum than a given one should be expended for an embassy? Could you go into the details of affirmative legislation?

Mr. PERKINS. Of course my friend from Kentucky, able lawyer that he is, will know in one minute, if he considers, that Congress can make any restrictions on expenditures it sees fit. It can say in the bill that the Secretary of State is authorized to expend $300,000 for the purchase of a building that stands at the corner of Unter den Linden avenue——

Mr. MANN. But it will be subject to a point of order just the same, under this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. That may be.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, but the gentleman does not want to ignore the fact that the whole point of my inquiry was whether you could, under the rules of the House, on a diplomatic appropriation bill provide affirmatively restrictions on expenditures.

Mr. PERKINS. We can provide for expenditures and for any restrictions——

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not follow. The gentleman is aware that on an appropriation bill you can not create law. You can carry out the purpose of what is already law.

Mr. PERKINS. Precisely, and this bill authorizes by law the purchase of certain buildings to be used for certain purposes. So we have the general authority, and having the general authority—just as Congress has the general authority to appropriate money for ambassadors and ministers—having the general authority, Congress, not subject to a point of order, can say that there shall be paid to the ambassador at Berlin so much and to the ambassador at Paris so much, and having the general authority of appropriating not only for the salary, not only for the clerk hire, but for the roof that shall cover the head of the minister at Berlin and the minister at Paris, it can provide the details of the roof in the same way that it provides for the details of the clerk hire and the salary allowance.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. PERKINS. Allow me just one word, and then I will yield. This bill has not been drawn with any desire to abrogate the prerogatives of Congress and turn them over to clerks in departments or heads of departments. We have said that—not to exceed one-half of this money shall be expended at Shanghai and Yokohama and not to exceed one-half shall be expended at Berlin and Mexico.

We knew what we were doing. The need of a building at Shanghai for our consuls, for our courts, for the purposes of our Government is a crying shame. We were offered buildings for this purpose that we could have obtained three years ago for $250,000 or $350,000. We did not buy them, because we had no authority and this Congress would not give it. They were taken by another and more sagacious government, and to-day we will have to pay $100,000 more to get the same results. We have in our minds just what will be done in Yokohama and in Shanghai. We had in our mind a building at Berlin, and is there any man in this House or in the United States who, in view of the unfortunate diplomatic incident of last year, does not think with regret, if not with a stronger feeling, that the time has been reached when the Government of these United States in the city of Berlin shall have its minister alike properly chosen and properly housed?

Mr. MANN. Then why did the committee change its mind as to the amount for Shanghai between February 27 and April 1?

Mr. PERKINS. Because the committee saw fit to do it. Even the committees of which my friend is a member sometimes change their minds.

Mr. MANN. Without any new information at all?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, we had more information than my friend thinks.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. The gentleman makes an argument as to this bill being particular in its expenditures, but he realizes, of course, that this bill, coming into this House under the conditions that it did come in, is not subject to the same rules that a general appropriation bill is.

Mr. PERKINS. I know that very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am in hearty sympathy with what the gentleman desires to accomplish. More than three years ago I took that position on this floor, but I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that under the provisions of this bill as drawn the only control that you would have over the expenditure of the money would be to determine whether or not you would make an appropriation, and to further determine in a negative way—never in an affirmative way—in the way of a limitation, that not more than such a sum should be expended, but you could not, under the parliamentary practice of this House on the diplomatic appropriation bill, without being subject to a point of order, affirmatively legislate as to the details of the expenditure. Now, whether the committee wants to pass a law in that shape is a matter to be considered, but that that is the legal effect of it I think the gentleman himself must admit.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I will only say that what we have to do to-day is, if the House sees fit, appropriate a million dollars for the purposes stated in this bill. When future bills come in, if they do, when future appropriations are asked, if they are asked, they will be disposed of by the rules of the House and by the wisdom of the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not intend to strike out section 1, does he?

Mr. PERKINS. No.

Mr. MANN. Then, we are doing a good deal more than appropriating $1,000,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say just one word more as bearing on this question. In my belief, and it is obtained by a good deal of study of the requirements, alike of our embassies and consular buildings, the entire amount which the Congress of the United States will ever be asked to expend for the proper housing—for all the housing that is required for our ambassadors in the great cities—of our consuls in the eastern portions of the world, will not cost as much as we have expended—I do not say but that we have wisely expended—for the two buildings erected for the use of the House and the Senate, and I think they will be quite as useful.

Mr. MANN. Now that the House is to lose the benefit of the guiding genius of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] in foreign affairs and accept with great pleasure the influence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], I think we are entitled to know something about the bill. The first section of this bill, I take it, is designed wholly for the purpose of hanging appropriations on in the future—using the word "hanging" with respect.

Mr. PERKINS. That probably is the object, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Now, it provides—

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States.

That is the enabling clause of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. He can do that when the appropriation is made.

Mr. MANN. An appropriation can only be made for acquiring sites and buildings for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments. Anything more in the appropriation than so much appropriated for a particular site is subject to a point of order under the rules of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Then, I know full well that whenever it is proper the point of order should be interposed my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be ready to interpose it.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the "gentleman from Illinois" I hope will be glad to interpose it when it is proper; but perhaps some gentleman in the House or even the "gentleman from Illinois" might interpose when it be not proper, and thereupon the restriction goes out, and then there is left in only the appropriation without the restriction as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky. Is not that the effect under this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a question we will have to discuss when it arises, but that does not arise to-day.

Mr. MANN. It has arisen to-day. The question now is whether we will give authority to the Committee on Foreign Affairs to bring into the House an appropriation bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the purchase of sites at some places where it chooses to select, and that that be in order. That is the question before the House now.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask my friend from Illinois if in these days of congressional depreciation from high sources he is going to say that it is his belief that a majority of this Congress would authorize an appropriation which it should not authorize, and say it should not therefore have any opportunity so to do?

Mr. MANN. Well, upon that question, when I think that as great a committee as the Committee on Foreign Affairs seriously brings into the House a bill providing that future Congresses can not appropriate money, I am at a loss to understand how far they could not do anything that is nonsensical.

Mr. PERKINS. That does not bind any Congress.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it purports to bind, when everyone in the House knows that we can not bind a future Congress, and when such a committee will do a thing like that I think they are liable to do other things as well.

Mr. PERKINS. It expresses the policy of the committee, and of course it is unnecessary to say to my friend from Illinois, even the rest of us know, that no Congress can bind any future Congress. That is known in New York as well as in Illinois.

Mr. MANN. But not known to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House whether the Committee on Foreign Affairs has received any other information of pressing instances where there is need of consular buildings other than those at Shanghai and Yokohama?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; at least 16 or 17 other places in China, Japan, and Korea are all pressing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee any estimate as to the amount of money that will be needed for buildings to be used for the housing of consular officers?

Mr. PERKINS. We reported a bill which is on the calendar now—which I would be very glad for this House to pass, but we shall not call up for passage—making appropriations for the urgent needs, I think all the important needs in China, Japan, and Korea, a bill which I reported myself with the advice and after consultation with the State Department, and the entire amount of the appropriation, if I remember aright, was about $1,300,000, of which one-third goes to Shanghai alone.

Mr. STAFFORD. That, as I understand it, is entirely limited to consular buildings, and not for residences for ambassadors.

Mr. PERKINS. To consular buildings entirely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there any instances other than China, Japan, and Korea where there is pressing need for consular buildings such as those to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not; not that I know of.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me for a minute——

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman from New York has referred to me because of a jocular remark I made a while ago.

Mr. PERKINS. I spoke in a jocular way also.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will acquit me of any intention to reflect upon him or his great committee or of drawing any invidious distinction between his committee and the Committee on Appropriations. I merely contended for the rights of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Mr. Chairman. I will say frankly that if this bill would provide, such as no doubt it would provide had it been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that $1,000,000——

Mr. PERKINS. A committee for which I have the highest respect.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I thank you. That $1,000,000 should be appropriated for the purpose of acquiring sites in the city of Berlin, the cities of Yokohama and Shanghai, and the City of Mexico, and that the Secretary of State be authorized to enter into negotiations for the purpose of purchasing sites for future buildings to be erected or for the acquisition of buildings already erected, I would have been in favor of this bill, providing the total should not exceed, say, $1,000,000, but as the bill reads now, it is too indefinite; and while I am heartily in favor of its purport, I can not persuade myself to support the bill in its present form.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], who was kind enough to yield to me for a question and then unkind enough to suggest that I put in more than one question, to the fact that I am not reflecting on the executive officers of the Government when I say that if you pass this bill there is no limitation upon the cost of these buildings. I want to call the attention of the committee to the first section of the bill, which virtually declares that this is a continuing appropriation of a million dollars a year, at least, if the Congresses coming after us shall ratify it. We know that they may make it ten millions if they want to, or they need not appropriate over $700,000 if they so desire, but the very fact that this bill itself provides that they shall appropriate a million dollars a year, and then in the second section provides that four places shall be taken, one-half of this million dollars appropriated by this bill to be given to Shanghai and Yokohama, and one-half to the buildings at Berlin and Mexico City—the very fact that it only limits the expense for this year for these buildings to this $1,000,000 hereby appropriated—would absolutely justify the executive officers in going ahead and spending one-half of this million dollars at these two places and the other half at the other two places, and creating as large a deficiency as in their judgment would be necessary to give the proper buildings to the United States. In other words, the bill does not limit the cost ultimately in any particular.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman understand the danger, on the other side, of fixing the specific sum of $250,000 for the building in Berlin? If the real-estate owners knew there was that much to be spent, do you suppose we could ever buy a building cheaper?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in that argument, because you could say, "not exceeding so much;" but this provides for two consular places at $500,000 and for two of the great embassies of the country only $500,000, and I submit to the Members of this House that the very language of the bill carries with it the thought that it is impossible to build two embassies—for Berlin and City of Mexico, respectively—at the same cost that you build the consular offices at the other two places. There is a difference in the cost, the rank, and the demand of the two positions. I wished to say this much because I did not desire to be put in a position of reflecting on the executive officers of the country, or especially the present Secretary of State, or the man I understand is to be Secretary of State in the next administration.

They would be justified in spending $500,000 in two places, $500,000 more in two other places, and then coming to Congress with the statement that it would require so much more to complete those buildings. I am not opposed to the principle that we should erect these buildings for our ministers and ambassadors in the various countries and at the leading consular places. I believe in that, but I believe that before entering upon it the plan should be well prepared and thoroughly digested. In my judgment, the committee could not have gotten up a bill more loosely drawn and fuller of loopholes, with all respect to the committee, than the one they have presented to this House. There is absolutely no restriction in it except in one point, and that is to try and bind future Congresses not to go beyond a million dollars a year, and the committee admits that this was absolute folly.

Mr. LOWDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The committee does not attempt that at all. The fact is, as everyone knows who has listened to the debate, that that first paragraph is necessary if you are going to have any authority to make an appropriation that will not be subject to a point of order and that is limited by a million dollars a year. A point of order would be perfectly proper if more than a million dollars were appropriated and this bill became a law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOWDEN], will pardon me, it strikes me that we could lay the foundations for this entire continuing work by providing, as the first part of the section, for the Secretary of State to enter into negotiations for the purpose of securing embassies and consular homes at the different places without saying anything about the amount each year. Then follow with, "and for the purposes of this act a million dollars is hereby appropriated; have specific amounts, and you have authorized the contract to be entered into and made it possible for the Congress of the United States to pass upon each one of them.

I never would appropriate one single dollar for any embassy or consular building if we did not provide something specific as to the limit of cost; and you are not making such a provision here. Let them buy the site, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], then we can make our own plans for the building; and when you have got the grounds on which to erect them we can go to the limit of cost, and make it not only one million but ten millions if we desire.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman realizes, of course, that in most of the European capitals there are no vacant lots which can be bought for this purpose, and therefore there must be authority to acquire the lot whether it has a building on it or not; and we can not afford to delay taking advantage of opportunities that may come because we are not able to buy land without a building on it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, if he will look at the bill, will find that it is only to buy a lot or any building in the four places mentioned in this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If it provided for the purchase of sites, making an appropriation for the purchase of sites, and leaving it to the Secretary of State, the whole matter could be worked out by a committee, maybe by his committee, if it is the proper committee, and I am inclined to think it is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman refer to the Committee on Ways and Means? I have not the honor of being a member of it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I refer to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. You formerly were a member of that committee, and the committee lost enormously when you left it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me very little harm can come from letting this matter rest until it can be thoroughly digested and fully debated by this House. It was taken up this afternoon when but few Members were present or believed that such a measure would come up. The result of it, if it is put through in its present form, will be, I think, a disappointment to the gentlemen who desire to accomplish this purpose. I think this country will in the near future commence with this arrangement of putting our foreign service on a dignified basis by which our representatives will be as well housed and cared for as those from any other country. The pay of our foreign representatives is less than that of other countries, and they are entitled to homes furnished by the Government. But I am not in favor of going into the matter in such way as will be a disappointment and lead to future trouble in Congress when these appropriations shall come up.

Now I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman not know that in the large capitals of Europe it is practically impossible to get a site in a suitable location, and is it not the purpose of the State Department to purchase buildings that are already constructed, and alter and repair them so as to make them suitable for the purpose that is intended?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, it does not seem to be so here in the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Well, is not the language of the first section of the bill intended to cover that very point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The language of the first section of the bill does not cover anything very much except a limitation upon the next Congress. The language of the second section is specific.

Mr. KAHN. The first section authorizes the Secretary to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KAHN (continuing). For the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and to alter, repair, and furnish the said buildings.

Now, the gentleman has been abroad, and I know he is, and must be, familiar with the fact that in the great capitals of Europe it is practically impossible to acquire a site. We may be able to buy a building occasionally in some capital or other. And is not the language of the first section of the bill intended to confer authority to acquire that building and use some of the money appropriated here for the purpose of altering it and making it suitable for the purpose of our ambassadors?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. The language of the first section goes on and tells what may be done. It then provides that not more than $1,000,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose at any session of Congress, and then comes the second section appropriating the entire million dollars, not for the purpose the gentleman says, but to secure consular and court buildings at Shanghai and Yokohama and embassy buildings at Berlin and the City of Mexico. It does not allow you to go where you have been talking about.

Mr. KAHN. Berlin is stated in point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Berlin is one of the points. The provision is limited to these four places. This entire million dollars is used for them, and this does not require these to be completed out of the million. It is only the first appropriation which is to commence the work. Now, if we are going into work of that kind, I would like to have more light upon the question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will my friend permit me to suggest to him that while I have no personal knowledge of the necessity which exists in the city of Berlin, that I do have knowledge from very frequent visits of the absolute necessity of some such thing as this being done in the City of Mexico.

I entirely agree with the suggestion which, I am told, was made here by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], that it is prosperous, undemocratic, and entirely improper to undertake to purchase or erect palaces in which to put American representatives. I am in hearty sympathy with the principle of the bill; but I should like to see some limitation of a specific nature put upon the expenditures, so that we can not cause the preposterous misfit of putting a man with a limited income into a palace, where the upkeep of it would amount to much more than his salary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no doubt that the same necessity exists in all the capitals of Europe that exists in the City of Mexico.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; my friend is mistaken. It is more difficult to get an adequate and proper house in the City of Mexico than in European capitals.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the City of Mexico most of the palaces have stables on the first floor, and that creates a little prejudice that they are not the best houses, but most of the houses have that form of construction, or had when I was there fourteen years ago.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was a long time ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have moved the stables out, have they, since then?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But what I want to get at is this, that when we enter upon a great scheme of public improvement that will properly house our representatives abroad, a scheme that in my opinion will cost a great many millions of dollars, and ought to cost a great many million dollars before it can be completed, we ought to start it in such a way that Congress will hold the purse strings, without any of the bickering and trouble that will follow if we start out under the provisions of this bill. There is no adequate provision made here for such an expensive and necessary expenditure of public funds.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has had charge of the making of many appropriation bills, and he spoke of the fact that half of this money had to be spent in two places and the other half in two other places. What is the gentleman's construction of that language in the bill—

> Not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure consular and court buildings at Shanghai and Yokohama, and not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure embassy buildings at Berlin and Mexico City.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My construction of that is that it only applies to this appropriation, and not to the total cost.

Mr. MANN. Does it require any expenditure at any of those places?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not necessarily.

Mr. MANN. Then they have half a million dollars to expend where they please?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should doubt that. I should think it would be a moral obligation at least on the executive officers to expend that in the places named in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the moral obligation would depend entirely upon the circumstances which arose to change it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think they could expend it some place else if they wanted to raise a row, but that is what it would do, and I do not think the executive officers would care to do that.

Mr. MANN. It is plain that it does not require them to expend the whole amount at those four places.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. Then they could expend as little as they pleased, and, as I say, they could spend $900,000 at one place if they wanted to under this bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My judgment is that the State Department would feel bound by this language to expend this $1,000,000 at these four places.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course it is conceivable that the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] might be carried out if we had an absolutely crazy man as Secretary of State; but does not the gentleman realize that these four specific objects are those which have been most urgently recommended by the Secretary of State as the objects for which an appropriation is now immediately necessary?

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, the distinguished committee of which the gentleman is one of the leading lights reported into this House last February a bill which did not name two of these places at all, but which involved the expenditure of $1,373,643, and when they reported that they forgot to put in Berlin and Mexico City.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Regarding that, I may say again that I regret that I am no longer a member of the committee, but nevertheless it is a fact that the two embassies most urgently favored by the Secretary of State have been the embassy in Paris and that in Berlin.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but this does not provide for an embassy in Paris at all. The bill does not mention Paris. The bill that is before us does not provide for an embassy at Paris.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But it does at Berlin.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said Berlin and Paris.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I said Berlin and Mexico City. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman from Illinois, I would say that I do not believe there is any trouble about any executive officer of the Government so violently disregarding the plain provisions of the law that he would undertake to spend this million dollars at any other point than those named in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid the gentleman from Iowa does not read all the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not be afraid to leave the provisions of the bill in that respect, but I do claim that after that money is spent there is nothing in the bill that requires an executive officer to confine the cost at those places to the million dollars. In answer to the gentleman from New York, I want to say that the same thing as applied to the War Department has applied to every department of the Government where they are charged with the construction of public buildings. There comes a time in all cases where the first appropriation does not absolutely limit the cost of the building, and they come in for almost double that amount.

I do not say it as a reflection on any cabinet officer, but it is simply a mistake of judgment in the men charged with the submitting of plans and estimates, and the only way in which they can make it absolutely certain is to fix in the law a limitation that the cost of the building shall not exceed a certain sum, and so make it impossible for them to adopt plans that will call for double the amount of money originally asked for for any particular building.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the gentleman admit that the fixing of that limit can be done in any bill appropriating money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They may take ten years to build one building and make it cost $10,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. But the gentleman is now talking about another matter.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am talking about the embassies abroad. In some places the price of ground is such that they might pay a half a million dollars for the ground alone. I do not care whether it is a half million or a million, if Congress decides that we ought to pay that amount, but let us do it in the proper way, and not let it go out at loose ends for any executive or clerk or any foreign minister or consular officer to bring upon the Government the opprobium of making a deal for a piece of ground, making an agreement to buy it, and then have Congress say it is too expensive, and we do not want to appropriate the money.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that the piece of ground for an embassy alone might cost $500,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Where?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In London, and I think you would pay $250,000 for a piece of ground suitable for an embassy in Berlin, and perhaps $300,000 or $400,000.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of criticising the details of this measure or its general object and purpose, but to appeal to this House not to undertake a new scheme involving the expenditure of millions until we get through with some that we have on hand now. It is said that the millionaires are willing to go abroad as ambassadors and spend a large portion of their income in great show, parade, and style; all of which is of no benefit to a simple democracy like ours. But getting away from that, why should we authorize the building of these buildings in foreign countries, to be laughed at if we do not continue, if we do not complete, if we do not erect buildings in accordance with the estimate placed upon our ability to do so? One gentleman—I think it was the gentleman from New York, but I may be mistaken—said that the effectiveness, the power, and the influence of the American ambassador in China depended more upon the house he lived in, or upon the outside show of expenditure, than upon the ability of the man and the prestige of the Nation.

Mr. HARRISON. I did make a statement which the gentleman may have misunderstood, because it was not exactly what he stated. I did not discuss the question of the ability of our representative to China, but I said that the style of house in which our minister or consul there lived had a very large effect upon the Chinese people, and that a man living in a house commensurate with the dignity of the United States can further the interests of our country much better than a man living in the miserable kind of places we have there now.

Mr. SIMS. Well, after all, it is the dignity of the gentleman, judged by the expenditure of the money by himself or by his Government, and not his reputation or the dignity of his country, that is to impress the Chinese. Are we not to-day confronted with bond issues to carry out schemes already authorized or in course of construction? Are we not to-day paying interest on bonds issued to build the Panama Canal? Are we not confronted with an estimate of the cost of that canal that far exceeds any former estimate?

I see an estimate from a pretty respectable source that it may cost as much as $500,000,000 to complete the canal. We have to finish it. We have undertaken it and we can not stand back and not complete it, and without reference to cost. We want to do it as cheaply as possible to do it well, but we would be the laughing stock of the world if we did not go ahead and complete that canal. We will also be laughed at if we commenced building a lot of embassies and consular buildings abroad and did not complete them. Why not wait until we get through with those things which to-day are running this Nation into debt before we commence any other project? We are being importuned here at home every day to buy the Appalachian Mountains, in order that we may conserve the forests. We are also being importuned to spend $50,000,000 a year in digging a canal from Chicago to the Mississippi River and a channel 14 feet through to the Gulf for the benefit of our home people.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], I believe, has introduced a bill authorizing a bond issue of $500,000,000 for the purpose of accomplishing that great result to our home people. The people here want something as well as style for our ministers and ambassadors abroad. There is another demand being made all over this country, and that is for federal aid to public road construction. When you tell the average farmer or wage-earner of this country that our millionaire ambassadors get $17,500 a year to live abroad, what does he think when you will not give a dime to build a road by his door? It will be hard to convince those gentlemen that you are spending money here wisely, judiciously, and for the benefit of the people who sent us here and who can keep us away when they see proper. In building this great canal that has been agitated for fifty years, did it ever enter into the minds of any voter, or even into the minds of great far-seeing statesmen who stand before me, that we would spend money on that Canal Zone for purposes for which it is now being spent? It may be a little thing, but it shows which way the wind blows.

I hold in my hand a paper called "The Canal Record." It says it is published by authority of the Canal Commission. I am informed it is done at public expense. If I am mistaken, I will be glad to have some one correct me. It is sent out free, as I understand, at least a certain number. I received one to-day. Here is the envelope. It is a franked envelope, and the penalty for the improper use of the frank is $300. It is marked "Official business." Much of what it contains pertains to the construction of the canal which it is important that members of Congress should know, but I struck one page of heavyweight material in this document, a part of which I will read, and I then began to think to myself what the Appropriation Committee was doing when it appropriated money to be used as it is here being used. When we get these foreign consular and embassy buildings under way, they may have to have a press agent located around so as to report the doings of our great dignitaries abroad, especially in China, where a man's efficiency is measured by the amount of show he makes, and not by his brains.

I have just received this issue of the Canal Record, which is dated December 23. The title to one entire page is "Social life on the zone." Here is some of the information that you are paying interest on bonds to scatter free through the mails. Listen, wise and noble statesmen. I may not pronounce these names correctly, but I hope you will not treat me as a Chinaman would and measure my usefulness by my lack of education. [Laughter:]

> The Gorgona Dramatic Club presented the farce comedy, The Doctor, to a large audience at the Commission Clubhouse on Saturday evening, December 19.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I must admit that some doctors are a farce, as are also some lawyers. This article continues:

> In response to a request from the residents of Gatun, the club will repeat the performance on Thursday evening, January 7. Arrangements will be made for a special train from Gatun to Gorgona and return.

Great national matters these! Matters that you must know, and that are sent free to some people. I am going to put it into the RECORD in order that it may go free to everybody, and so treat the people all alike.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there is any objection to the Isthmian Canal Commission publishing that information for the benefit of its employees or for the employees to have a dramatic association?

Mr. SIMS. Well, when I get through perhaps the gentleman will ask a question applying to all I am reading, but I am not yet through.

Mr. MANN. I thought you had finished.

Mr. CLAYTON. Was it a free show? That is what I want to know.

Mr. SIMS. I am not informed as to whether the show was free or not. I will read some more:

The following announcement is made to the zone clubs in regard to the federation pins: Members who wish to order the pin, which is a Tiffany design in dull gold, with palm leaves of green enamel, will kindly notify the chairman of the committee, Mrs. Thomas E. Brown, jr., Cristobal, through their club secretary, as it is desired to send in the order for the pins with as little delay as possible.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Tiffany design?

Mr. SIMS. It says "Tiffany design;" I do not know whether they got them from Tiffany or not. Now, here is another:

SINGING CLUB.

It is desired to organize a singing club in Ancon, and an invitation is extended to residents of Ancon and La Boca who have taken part in any amateur production, either singing or speaking, to send their names to the undersigned. The club will be regularly organized and be governed by a set of rules which it is believed will conduce to united and satisfactory work.

W. F. BENNYHOFF, Ancon.

And here is another:

NOTICE TO KANGAROOS.

All Kangaroos at Cristobal, Colon, and Porto Bello, who have signed application for and are interested in forming a court at Cristobal, please meet at Lodge Hall, Cristobal, on Sunday, December 27, at 2 p. m., for the purpose of perfecting an organization.

J. K. GIBSON,
Chairman of Committee.

Now, here is one in which the United States and the world no doubt is interested, which we will forgive them for printing and sending abroad at government expense:

TIVOLI CLUB DANCE.

The Tivoli Club will give its next dance at the Hotel Tivoli on Thursday evening, December 31, New Year's eve, instead of on Saturday, December 26.

Now, these are not all. I have only read you some samples from the last issue. Every issue of this paper has a multitude of such notices in it, and has recently sent out in bound form a large number of the first issues—I have forgotten for how long, but several months—from which I have a string of such items too long to read here now.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the official information furnished in the Canal Record is of sufficient importance to warrant the publication of that record?

Mr. SIMS. The information bearing on the canal construction and matters necessarily relating thereto I certainly have no objection to being furnished to those entitled to it at government expense.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman been educated or edified by the information furnished through the Canal Record in connection with the work of the construction of the canal?

Mr. SIMS. Well, I have often read information, or purported information, in this paper that I appreciated as valuable.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact if the gentleman read the Record that he would be able to keep himself familiar with the progress being made in the construction of the canal?

Mr. SIMS. Why, if all of it is given, certainly; but I do not know whether it is all given or not. I presume it is under the authorization of the Canal Commission, but what I am criticising is this: As I have said, I do not know how much this adds to the cost. I do not know what the editor of this paper gets or whether he gets anything out of the government crib or not, and do not even know who he is. I do not care——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to be informed, he is Mr. Bishop, secretary of the commission. Now, does the gentleman object to the Isthmian Canal Commission endeavoring to furnish social life to the people from the United States employed on the zone in the work of building this canal?

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the gentleman if his constituents are willing to be taxed and to tax future generations by bond issues to run a paper to give notices of dances, club meetings, and other things usually found in the society columns of local papers?

Mr. MANN. My constituents, and I believe the gentleman's constituents, are proud to be able to contribute a little bit to lessen the severity and lack of social life of those people who have gone from my district and other districts to the Canal Zone to help build the canal. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I find a great many of my people want to undertake the severity of living down there at the salaries paid, but they can not get the jobs.

I want to say, further, that I believe any Member of this House would be very glad to accept a position on the Canal Zone and live there at the salary paid members of the Canal Commission who do live there, and that they would be willing to pay for social notices out of their own pockets to let their people know when the whist clubs meet and the dances are to be had, without putting it in a weighty government publication, paid for by the Government, and sent through the mails free.

I am talking about what this kind of thing leads to. I do not know of any authority for it, unless the "bad Appropriation Committee" put something in the appropriation bills authorizing it, and we have followed their lead and voted for it, and "did not know it." But see where we are going, where we are tending, and what we submit to. We might as well have a vaudeville theater there, paid for at government expense, in order that our $15,000 salaried commissioners may be entertained at government expense.

What is a minority Member for if not to tell the truth about the majority and let them take care of themselves the best they can? I am reading from a record published at public expense and not confined to information necessary to be known by anybody except those who ought to pay for it if they want it bad enough to have it.

That is what we do here in Washington. We buy the papers here, and pay for them, that tell what time your family will be invited to some social affair, dance, or whist club performance.

When your Government is running behind every day, when the Ways and Means Committee are bothering their brains to try to reduce the tariff on articles of consumption and at the same time get enough money to run a Government whose necessary expenses are increasing every day and must continue to increase, we should not enter into this project of building palaces, palatial abodes for our foreign ministers and ambassadors and consuls, in order that we may equal in "swelldom" the monarchies of Europe, that we do not pattern after, follow, or seek to follow. I think the bill ought to be voted down.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have the floor now. Just wait a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] has the floor. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, to be short and brief, that the Government of the United States should at this time begin this almost endless, huge expense in foreign countries. We are familiar with the present condition of the Treasury. The revenues are running behind. We understand that. We are all familiar with what the people of this country want built in this country. It is needless to take up the time of the committee to recite the enterprises that we have and those that we want. Let us look at conditions here in the District of Columbia. A few days ago we had up the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and I noticed a great deal of money being paid out for rent of buildings in the District. I asked the committee how much rent we paid for buildings in Washington City. One Member said about $150,000 a year, another said about $200,000, another about $300,000, I think, and another guessed about $400,000, and by this time a Member looked up the facts and stated that we are now paying $471,000 for rent of private buildings in which the public service is conducted in this city.

Since that statement, down here on F street, I believe it is, we have lost by fire in the Geological Survey about $20,000 worth of valuable documents, documents of a kind that we all know are of value. We rented this building for public use. The public service was otherwise interrupted by this fire. Since then I have noticed in the public press a statement made by a very distinguished engineer whom I happen to know, and a very bright, brainy, enterprising engineer of San Francisco. Hear what he said:

Valuable records in danger.

LACK OF FIREPROOF CONSTRUCTION IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, December 24, 1908.

The lack of fireproof construction in the government buildings, the need of which was accentuated by the recent fire in the Geologic Survey, the second in four years, is a serious matter for congressional consideration, according to Marsden Manson, city engineer of San Francisco, who is on a visit to the city. It was his duty to inspect the burned area after the San Francisco catastrophe, and on the information gained were drafted the present building regulations in force there, which are said to be the strictest in the country.

"In examining many of the buildings in Washington occupied by the various departments," he says, "buildings in which are stored data and documents of almost incalculable value, I find that they are mainly structures which would not rank higher than San Francisco's third class of buildings. It is astounding that the Government faces such risks. Note the Geological Survey fire. The floors in that building are of wood; so are the doors and file cases and furniture, and in that building are data many times the value of the structure. Note the Interior Department, with its valuable records. You will find wooden shelving, wooden furniture, and wooden window frames. Now, a building of that kind is not safe. I would suggest for economy that the government buildings be put in better shape to resist possible fire."

During the discussion here to-day I sent to the document room and got what is known as the "Book of Estimates," which I now hold in my hand, and which was referred to by the member of the committee who replied to my inquiry a few days ago about what it cost to rent buildings in Washington City. I am going to read from it, because during my long service here I have never heard this question discussed. It has rather gone unnoticed, so far as I know. We have appropriated from year to year for rents and the amounts have increased, and so on and so on, and public attention has not been challenged to it. I find stated in Appendix D a statement of "Buildings rented within the District of Columbia for use of the Government."

Here is a "recapitulation," and I hope every gentleman in the Chamber will listen to these figures:

Department.	Amount.
State	$3,580.00
Treasury	60,566.00
War	17,720.00
Navy	24,500.00
Interior	60,325.00
Post-Office	49,405.00
Agriculture	64,475.00
Commerce and Labor	70,709.80
Justice	28,200.00
District of Columbia	41,296.50
Interstate Commerce Commission	43,200.00
Public Printer	7,400.00
Total	471,377.30

Making a total of $471,377.30 that the Government of the United States is annually paying out for private houses in which to transact the public business. Is that wise or not? Is that economy or not? That is the question.

Now, how long that great drain has gone on I do not know, but, I presume, for years and years. How much longer is that policy to be pursued? While the matter was up a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] said it was his judgment—in response to a question I had asked—that we should issue bonds and let the future help to pay for erecting proper and necessary buildings for the public use in the District of Columbia. He stated it at $50,000,000. I talked with him a day or two ago, possibly to-day, and he stated we should issue $20,000,000; that that amount would erect enough buildings for many years. But whether we should issue bonds or not, I am talking about facts which should interest every Member of this House and will interest the people of this country. Now, then, I am going to run through, with the indulgence of the committee, some of the items of rental.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it more important to construct public buildings in the District, to stop paying rent, than to construct buildings in the other cities of the United States for the purpose of stopping rent there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I will say to my friend that they both should be done, but done wisely.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it practicable for the Government to engage in the construction of public buildings, not only in Washington, but in every city of the United States where there is not a post-office building, all at once?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly; in proper cases we should put up post-office buildings.

Mr. MANN. Would not the construction of post-office buildings throughout the country come a little ahead of the construction, all at once, of buildings to be used in the District in the place of those for which rents are paid?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am stating those unknown facts, so that Congress and the people can take them and consider what should be done here in Washington City and also decide where there should be buildings for the post-offices in the several States.

Mr. MANN. We could take the money gentlemen propose to spend here and put up some post-office buildings in the country?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not proposing to spend a single dollar. I am not discussing whether we should appropriate a single dollar or not. I am calling attention to facts which I have never heard discussed. I am doing it for the purpose of calling it to the attention of the House, the Senate, and the people.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman always gives us valuable information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not talking about the issuing of bonds; I am stating facts. Now, let us see what we are paying for some of these private buildings.

I read from this document:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Third and fourth floors and two sections on fifth floor, Nos. 920 and 922 E street NW. Storage of documents and records, $8,000.

Third, fourth, and sixth floors and north half of fifth floor, Union Building, G street, between Sixth and Seventh streets NW. Offices Auditor for Post-Office Department and Auditor for the Interior Department, $23,250.

Now, that is in the Treasury Department. Here is the building for the Navy Department:

For the Mills Building, $24,500.

Mr. SABATH. For how many years?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For each year.

Building rented by the Navy Department in Washington for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909—the Mills Building—$24,500.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is that for?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For the Mills Building.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What was the $23,000 for?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For—

Offices of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department and the Auditor for the Interior Department, Union Building, on G street between Sixth and Seventh streets NW., $23,250.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Three floors?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. Now let us go over on the next page.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

In the Interior Department, F street NW., we pay an annual rental of $29,200 for the Hooe Building. I am giving only the large items. Here are a lot of other buildings that are rented at less rates, running from $1,000 to $8,125, making a total of $60,325 that we are paying in rent for the Interior Department.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Let us take up the Post-Office Department. First and K streets NE., mail-bag repair shop, and so forth, $34,400. The total for the year for that department is $49,405.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

When we turn to the Department of Agriculture, it looks as though the rented houses are scattered all over the city of Washington. Here are a great number of buildings that look as though they might be more or less shanties, that the Department of Agriculture is now renting. The total rent is $64,570 for the Agricultural Department. Here is the Atlantic Building, 930 F street NW., $24,805; another building, $10,110.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Now we come to the Department of Commerce and Labor: The Willard Building, 513–15 Fourteenth street NW., $11,830; the Emory Building, $21,000; the National Safe Deposit Building, $6,750; another at $7,000; another at $4,000; another at $2,000; another at $4,000; another at $4,900, and so on; making all told, $70,200.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

We come now to the Department of Justice: No. 1000 Vermont avenue, for records and office and business of the department, $6,500; No. 1435 K street NW., for records, and so forth, $10,000, and so on; making a total of $28,200.

Then follows a list of buildings rented by the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, $41,296.50.

Then for the Public Printer, $7,400.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Then we come to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which occupies that old rattletrap of a building down on F street, the American National Bank Building, 1317 F street, the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth floors, five rooms on the second floor, and one room on the first floor; also entire cellar, including heater, elevator, and water service, $28,800; Nos. 1307, 1309, and 1311 G street, Epiphany Building, second third, and fourth stories, $12,000; making a total of $43,200.

Making a grand total of $471,377.30 that we annually pay for the rent of buildings for governmental purposes in this District. Those figures are official. Now, how long is that policy to be pursued? And if these are facts (and no one can dispute them) should we embark in the matter that is now pending?

Particularly with our Treasury in the condition in which it is? We know just as well as we know that we are standing on the floor of this House, judging the future by the past, that the appropriation of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 to start this great enterprise that may or may not be much needed (I observed the fact when I was abroad that it was needed in some places) will only be a beginning, and that it will require many millions of dollars to accomplish. Should we undertake it when the conditions here in the District of Columbia and other cities in the United States where there are government offices are such as I have described, conditions which should be met promptly? It certainly does look to me as though we should first take care of these matters here at home.

Now, following up that information which I have just given you and which I received a few days ago, I introduced yesterday the following resolution.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. I understood the gentleman to say that the total rent cost to the Government here in the city of Washington was $471,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Four hundred and seventy-one thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars and sixty-seven cents.

Mr. HARDY. Can the gentleman give an idea of the cost of the maintenance of the Senate and House Office Buildings?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No. But I will say to the gentleman that ever since I have been in Congress I have paid from $10 to $25 a month for rent of a place in which to transact public business for my people and the country, and now I do not have to pay that unjust burden.

Mr. HARDY. I have heard it estimated that the cost was $35,000 each.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman had been in Congress as long as I have and paying $10 a month between sessions and as soon as the gavel falls in this House $25 a month for an office in which to transact the public business, I am sure the gentleman would have thought as I do, that it was a great hardship for Members to be obliged to hire an office in which to do public work. When the gentleman was a judge—and I am sure he was a good one—and held court, the courthouse was given free in order that he might transact the public business. He would have thought it rather hard for him if he had to rent a building in which to hold court and administer justice.

Mr. HARDY. My only object was to get at the facts, because that would be an addition to the $471,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But does not the gentleman from Texas think that this matter ought to be taken up and investigated? Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to read my resolution of yesterday and then conclude my remarks. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the Government of the United States is now paying $471,000 annually for the use of private buildings in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia in which to conduct the public business and store valuable documents; and

Whereas some of these buildings are not fireproof and are unsafe and otherwise unfit for such service; and

Whereas recently a large number of valuable public records were destroyed by fire in one of said buildings and the public business otherwise interrupted: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to thoroughly investigate the necessity for renting said buildings or other private buildings for said purposes, the reasonableness of the rental paid and to be paid, the kind and length of existing leases, and the necessity for the Government to erect suitable buildings in said city and District in which to transact the public business and the probable cost thereof, making a full and complete investigation of the whole subject, the said committee being fully authorized and empowered to summon and examine witnesses, administer oaths, and make said investigation as clear and complete as practicable.

Mr. Chairman, that resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, and I hope that in due course it will be reported. I have been asked by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] if I have any information whether it will cost more to construct buildings than to rent them. This resolution I have introduced calls for that very information. I do not know. I am giving you the official facts and you can draw your own deductions. When we expect this Republic to exist until all other republics have dissolved, we ought to begin to think whether it would be better to own all our buildings than to go along in the manner in which we have. Now, so much for that.

Going back to the pending bill, I find in the Book of Estimates the salaries paid to our ambassadors and ministers to be as follows:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Austria-Hungary, Brazil, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Russia, and Turkey, at $17,500 each; envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Belgium, Chile, China, Cuba, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Spain, at $12,000 each; envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Salvador, and Venezuela, at $10,000 each; envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Denmark, Morocco, Norway, Paraguay and Uruguay, Portugal, Roumania and Servia and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria, Sweden, and Switzerland, at $10,000 each; envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Greece and Montenegro, $10,000; envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Bolivia, Ecuador, Haiti, Persia, and Siam, at $10,000 each; minister resident and consul-general to the Dominican Republic, at $10,000; minister resident and consul-general to Liberia, at $5,000; agent and consul-general at Cairo, at $6,500; and chargé d'affaires ad interim, $40,000.

The total is $550,500.

The total for "Foreign intercourse" being $3,880,194.72, as shown by the footing on page 166 of this document.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the Japanese and Mexican projects that may be needed. I am disposed to believe that they are needed in both places, but we are paying the ambassadors $17,500, and now it is proposed to give them great ambassadorial residences, where they can entertain hugely. But we need improvements here at home, where the people are not receiving $17,500 salaries. Our people are clamoring for them—our locks and dams, our rural delivery roads, our interstate roads that the Supreme Court has decided within the last twelve months we have the legal right to build. All these the people are clamoring for. There is the deepening of the Mississippi River, a great project, the draining of the Lakes, and the finishing of our post-office buildings. I have been working here for twelve years to get a small appropriation for a post-office in my district, and only succeeded in getting a $5,000 site last session, and when complete the building is to cost only fifty or sixty thousand dollars.

Now, then, is it wise, with this great Panama burden upon us, with the liability to strike a hole at any time and the whole business sink—with that endless chain of expense; with our army increasing and its expense; with our navy that must increase, each ship costing us over $10,000,000; and with the Philippine Islands—that running sore, as it were—is it wise for us to enter upon this project at this time? I speak of the Philippine Islands as being a running sore. That is honest, too. They have brought the plague to our borders exactly as I prophesied when I went to the Philippine Islands and came back, and you all smiled at me when I prophesied that, but it has all come true. My heart has ached to see this poor leper out here in the woods staked out like a wild animal in a thicket, where his own wife and his own child, just born, is not allowed to go about him, and all because we went to the Philippine Islands and shot independence into those people, when they wanted their own independence, and that has put that burden not only upon our conscience, but upon the Treasury of the United States. We have the great western slope inoculated with the plague, more or less, and my distinguished friend from California [Mr. KAHN], who always gets whatever he wants, obtained an immense appropriation here, and I voted for it gladly and would do it again to wipe out that plague. Our ships from the Philippines brought the plague to the Golden Gate. It is all over the West.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell my friend that the plague is entirely gone. There is no plague there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; but it is likely to return in every ship from the Philippines. Every mouse that comes across brings it from his nose to his tail. Have you killed all the rats in San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. Killed the rats; practically all. It is carried by the rats.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well. There are more to come, and when the gentleman tells me that I feel like saying, "Oh, rats!" because we all know the plague is coming again, and the burdens of the Treasury we all know have been increased. I think it is about half a million of dollars that we gave those people there in order to exterminate the plague in San Francisco, was it not, I will ask the gentleman from California?

Mr. KAHN. Why, for the purpose of use; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, how much money did we give you? I did not talk anything about the use of it.

Mr. KAHN. Congress appropriated $500,000 on one occasion and $200,000 on another occasion.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And what will be required this year—a million?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; only a small sum.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I venture to say that the gentleman will not say that he will not ask for a million dollars.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his premise. That money was not asked specifically for San Francisco. It is asked for stamping out the plague in every section of the country where it may be found.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman make a speech for it and put it upon the ground that it would be all over the West.

Mr. KAHN. The danger was that it would be all over the West.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and before we brought the Philippine Islands under our wing it was not all over the West, nor in Washington, and we did not have to take $500,000 out of the Treasury to go out and help the doctors exterminate the plague. I hear of cases all over the United States now. It just goes to show what my good Republican friends have brought upon the country over my protest.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is mistaken as to where the plague comes from. It comes from China and India and Japan.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It did not come before we got the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KAHN. I am inclined to think there have been sporadic cases long before we got the Philippines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The record is that you did not ask for any money to exterminate it until recent years. You gave the mice and rats a chance in your town, and now you do not do it. So, gentlemen, we are traveling mighty fast, if we only turn around and look to see how far we have gone. Our burdens are almost limitless and the possibilities are incalculable. I know the gentlemen who have reported this bill have given it serious consideration. We have their judgment that it is needed. You know, gentlemen, that my colleague [Mr. SIMS] has vigorously and intelligently pointed out to you the heavy responsibilities that are upon us here at home, and I do think before we go across on the other shore that we should stop and see what is to do at our door and what is at the gateway of the taxpayers of this country that we have not given them, and to which they are entitled as citizens and taxpayers, and what the Government needs as a government here in the city of Washington and elsewhere in the States, before we embark in something the end of which we can hardly contemplate, which involves millions of dollars, at a time when a bond issue is threatened, when our Treasury is practically bankrupt, when, as we know, we are now meddling with the tariff, which always means that the amount of revenues is lessened, and when we have before us an army of unemployed. Now, gentlemen of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I say, in all kindness, that under the circumstances, however meritorious your proposition is, it should not at this time be adopted, and I do not intend to vote for it.

APPENDIX.

Statement of buildings rented within the District of Columbia for the use of the Government, as required by the act of July 16, 1892 (27 Stat., p. 199).

BUILDINGS RENTED BY THE STATE DEPARTMENT IN WASHINGTON FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1909.

BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 6495) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask if there is a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. BACON. From what committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is not true that the bill changes the national banking laws of the country as applied to the District of Columbia? I understand that the general national banking law applies to the District of Columbia as it does to any other section of the country. As I caught the reading of the bill, there are certain restrictions and limitations placed upon the national banking law as applied to the District of Columbia and not applied to the balance of the country. I should be glad to have the Senator from Vermont explain it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, there are doing business in the city of Washington at this time a large number of banking institutions, a considerable number of whom have received their charters from States and have come here under state charters to do business.

The first section of the bill provides that those who seek to do business in this District may organize banks with not less than $100,000 capital, under precisely the same conditions that national banks are organized, having the same number of associates, filing the same certificate, and receiving from the Comptroller of the Currency a certificate that they have complied with the law. It puts them under precisely the same regulations that national banks are under for this District.

When we come to the second section, it provides that the banks that have come from outside with outside charters may convert themselves into banks of the District under precisely the same regulations by which state banks convert themselves into national banks. If the Senator will look at section 2, I think he will find that the provisions are almost precisely the same as those in the national banking act providing for the conversion of state banks.

Then, when we come to section 3, there is the following provision:

That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, no company, association, or corporation shall transact a banking business or maintain an office or banking house where deposits or savings are received within the District of Columbia except associations organized under the national banking act, corporations organized under an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia," approved October 1, 1890; except also a branch or branches in the District of Columbia of foreign banking corporations which have branches outside the United States and are engaged in international banking, building associations receiving payments from their own members, and corporations organized under this act, and any person, firm, or copartnership now engaged, or that may hereafter engage in the business of private banking in the District of Columbia.

Then comes a provision that private bankers shall pay a license fee, and they are limited in their right to advertise their business. They are not permitted under any circumstances to advertise that they are a bank.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator From Georgia?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. If this bill shall become a law, as I understand the Senator, banking associations in the District of Columbia hereafter can not do business except under this act.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Under this act——

Mr. CLAY. And banking associations that have come into the city and engaged in business under state charters or under the existing law will have to comply with this law; otherwise they will have to go out of business?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They will have to convert themselves into banking associations under this law and become subject to the examination of the Comptroller of the Currency. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The provision in section 3 strikes me as a very radical departure from the rules that have heretofore governed in the organization of national banks. I do not know of any good reason why a foreign banking association, not organized under the laws of our country, should be given such a status in the District of Columbia as section 3 provides. I should like to know from the Senator whether there is any banking corporation now doing business in the District of Columbia not organized under the national banking law. Is this provision to cover some present case?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is to cover, as I understand it, Mr. President, one particular case. The International Banking Association—I do not know that I give the name correctly—is a corporation which has branches in almost every nation of the earth. They have a branch in this city, the office being just above Willard's Hotel on F street. I understand that it is an institution of the finest character and standing, and one through which our Government does business in some foreign nations. This exception was put in because it is utterly impossible for a bank of that character to make its reports and keep its accounts as other banks, so that they can be inspected at the same time and bring the reports up to specific dates.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator under what law the International Banking Association is incorporated.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to know whether it is an incorporated institution at all or whether it is a purely voluntary association, with a big title and no responsibility to any state or any country. If that is the case, I am utterly opposed to opening the door to general banking business by any association not formed under the law, and subject to the strictest supervision that can be imposed by law.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very gladly, if the Senator from California can give any information on that point.

Mr. FLINT. I desire to ask under what rule this bill is being considered, and whether an objection will take it over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is being considered under Rule VIII, and is subject to objection.

Mr. FLINT. I ask that it may go over. A commission is now examining this very question, and it seems to me a mistake to take up the banking question for the District of Columbia when we now have a financial commission considering the whole banking system of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from California.

APPEALS FROM DISTRICT COURT OF ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 13649) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A report accompanies the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read. The report is brief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. FULTON May 18, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13649) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report it back to the Senate and recommend that it do pass.

At the present time practically all appeals from the district court of Alaska must be heard at San Francisco. There is no direct communication between San Francisco and Alaska, and hence the litigant in Alaska in order to attend the court of appeals in San Francisco must pass through Seattle, Wash., or Portland, Oreg., both going to and returning from San Francisco, and must travel about 2,000 miles farther than if the case were heard at Seattle, Wash., or Portland, Oreg. There is now annually held both at Seattle and Portland a term of the circuit court of appeals; hence it will impose no inconvenience on the court to hear at one of those places all cases which the best interests of the Alaska litigants require should be heard there. The Delegate from the district of Alaska strongly favors this bill, which proposes to change the existing law so that the trial court may designate at what place the appeal shall be heard—that is, whether it shall be heard at San Francisco, Cal.; at Portland, Oreg., or at Seattle, Wash. It is provided, however, that at any time before the hearing of the appeal the parties thereto may stipulate at which of the above-named places the same shall be heard.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

The bill (H. R. 21899) for the appointment of an inland waterways commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND.

The bill (S. 6626) providing for the condemnation for any public purpose of lands owned or held by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLINT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from California, without prejudice.

COL. WILLIAM F. STEWART.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 192, requesting the President to convene a court of inquiry in the case of Col. William F. Stewart.

Mr. FRYE. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution has never been to any committee. It went to the calendar, under the rule, at 2 o'clock. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES J. SMITH.

The bill (S. 6586) to correct the military record of Charles J. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Charles J. Smith shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company F, Third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, as of date August 1, 1865; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to said Charles J. Smith an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT B. WHITACRE AND FREDERICK T. HILDRED.

The bill (S. 7721) for payment of Robert B. Whitacre and Frederick T. Hildred the sum of $944.97 for blasting powder used by the United States Government to complete the Belle Fourche irrigation project was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report in that case be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. CLAPP December 16, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the foregoing bill, having examined the same, report it favorably and recommend its passage without amendment.

MEMORANDUM.

In 1906 the firm of Widell-Finley Company was engaged in the construction of the irrigation project known as the "Bellefourche project," in South Dakota. While so engaged the claimants furnished, among other things, 800 kegs of blasting powder. Upon the failure of the contractors this powder was unpaid for, and the Government had and used 742½ kegs of said powder, as appears from the letter of the acting director hereto attached. While the contract price for the work amounted to over $100,000, the bond taken by the Government was only $21,500. Upon the failure of the contractors the Government continued the work at a cost of about $65,000, which more than exhausted the bond. The law provides that persons furnishing goods can join in a suit on a bond, but can only participate in the benefits after the charge of the Government has been paid. (See ch. 778 of the Laws of 1905, p. 811, Stat. L., 33, pt. 1.)

Under the rules parties are not furnished information as to the amount of the bond, and therefore naturally rely on the Government taking a sufficient bond.

In further support of the report reference is made to the exhibits hereto attached.

EXHIBIT A.

ST. PAUL, MINN., November 25, 1907.

Hon. F. H. NEWELL,
Chief of Bureau of Reclamation, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We hereby respectfully submit our claim against the United States for $942.97 with interest from March 26, 1906, at 6 per cent per annum.

This amount is the purchase price and reasonable value of 742½ kegs of blasting powder sold and delivered by us to Widell-Finley Company at Bellefourche, S. Dak., on February 1, 1906, and appropriated and used by the United States in the completion of government work at that point. No part of this claim has been paid.

The facts connected with this claim are as follows:

On January 25, 1906, we contracted with Widell-Finley Company to sell and deliver to them at Bellefourche, S. Dak., 800 kegs of blasting powder for $1,016 (freight to be added), to be used in the government work at that place provided for in Schedule No. 2, main supply canal, and to be paid for within sixty days from delivery.

Our claim as originally presented to the United States (see letter No. 4, hereto attached), was for $1,318.61, which covered 800 kegs of powder at $1,016, freight (paid by Widell-Finley Company) $264; fuses returned to us, $38.61.

Previous to our contract for this powder the Widell-Finley Company contracted with the United States to do this work, as we are advised, for $107,000. (See copy of letter of Mr. R. F. Walter, engineer in charge, of July 17, 1906, marked No. 1.)

These contractors furnished a bond, dated April 26, 1905, for $21,500 (copy of which is attached, marked No. 2). We have not been able to secure copy of the contract. (See copy of letter attached, marked No. 3, dated December 6, 1906, from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.)

On February 14, 1906, a petition of certain creditors was filed in the District Court of the United States at Mankato, Minn., requesting the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy of the Widell-Finley Company, which petition was heard, and they were adjudged bankrupts on February 25, 1906, and Henry W. Volk, of Mankato, appointed trustee.

The United States then took charge of the work and took possession of and used 742½ kegs of this powder in prosecuting the work. (See letter of June 19, 1906, of Acting Director of Geological Survey, marked No. 4.)

This work was completed by the Government about September 4, 1907, at a cost in excess of the contract price "in the neighborhood of $65,000." (See copy of letter of Mr. Walter, dated September 4, 1907, and marked No. 5.)

It is impossible to determine what, if any, dividend will be paid in this bankruptcy proceedings, but it is safe to say that such dividend, if any, will be absorbed in paying the claim of the United States against Widell-Finley Company on account of this contract, the United States being a preferred creditor.

We were advised by letter of the Acting Director of the Geological Survey, dated June 19, 1906 (copy of which is attached, marked "No. 4"), that persons supplying material in connection with public works are given a "complete remedy" under the terms of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor in the construction of public works," passed August 13, 1894, and amended February 24, 1905 (32 U. S. Stat., 811).

In this case, however, a bond for only 20 per cent of the contract price was required, although the contract price was entirely inadequate. (See letter of Mr. Walter dated October 19, 1906, marked "No. 6.")

The liability on the bond will be entirely exhausted by the United States as a preferred creditor under this act.

The fact is that Widell-Finley Company at the time of making our contract was insolvent, and must have known that they could not pay for the powder. We are advised by our attorney that if this fact was then known to them, we could avoid the sale and take possession of the powder as against everyone but the United States.

We were, however, powerless to proceed against the Government as we might against a private individual to recover the powder, as the United States can not be sued, and we, therefore, permitted the Government to use our powder, expecting to receive pay for it when the claim was properly presented.

On December 13, 1906, we filed our claim with the trustee in bankruptcy, believing that the Government would expect that we reduce the claim by any dividends that might be paid.

As no liens for material or labor can be filed on government property or in connection with government work, the statute before referred to was passed as we understand it, and as it appears to be understood by government officials (see letter No. 4), to furnish a name by which such claims may be paid in case of default on the part of the contractor.

It seems to us, therefore, clearly the duty of the United States Government to exact a sufficient bond. This they failed to do, taking a bond, as before mentioned, for only 20 per cent of the contract price, which price was, according to Mr. Walter, "much lower than anyone could do the work." (See letter No. 6.)

The act before mentioned, which, according to its terms, is "for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor in the construction of public work," is, of course, entirely ineffectual if the government officials charged with the duty of securing the bond fail to fix an amount sufficiently large to indemnify material men against all contingencies.

Our position and claim for compensation direct from the Government is that the Government used and had the benefit of our powder, and is as much obligated to pay for it as if it contracted directly with us for it.

We also claim the right for compensation on the additional ground that the Government failed to provide a sufficient bond for the benefit of persons supplying material or labor in connection with this work.

Yours, respectfully,

R. B. WHITACRE & CO.

Mr. A. E. HORN,
Room 914 Pioneer Press Building, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I have your inquiry of July 14, and in answer to the questions therein would state that the amount of contract with the Widell-Finley Company for schedule 2, main supply canal, was $107,000. The amount paid them to date by the Government is $57,800. It is impossible to tell what the finishing of the work is going to cost the Government at this time, as the work will not be completed for about three months, but it is certainly going to cost more than the contract price.

Yours, truly,

R. F. WALTER,
Engineer in Charge.

BOND.

Know all men by these presents, that we, The Widell-Finley Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota and doing business in Mankato, county of Blue Earth and State of Minnesota, principal, and Adolph O. Eberhart and Thomas R. Coughlan, of Mankato, county of Blue Earth and State of Minnesota, and William G. Hoerr and Frederick Kron, of Mankato, county of Blue Earth and State of Minnesota, sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the United States of America in the sum of $21,500 lawful money of the United States, for which payment well and truly to be made we bind ourselves, and each of us, our and each of our heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for and in the whole, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and attested by our signatures at Mankato, Minn., this 26th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1905.

The nature of this obligation is such that if the said The Widell-Finley Company, its successors and assigns, or any of them, shall and do in all things well and truly observe, perform, fulfill, accomplish, and keep, all and singular, the covenants, conditions, and agreements whatsoever which, on the part of the said principal, its successors and assigns, are, or ought to be, observed, performed, fulfilled, accomplished, and kept, comprised, or mentioned in certain articles of agreement bearing date the 26th day of April, 1905, between the said principal and E. A. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, concerning the construction and completion of the work provided in schedule 2, main supply canal, Bellefourche project, South Dakota, according to the true intent and meaning of said articles of agreement, and shall promptly make payment to all persons supplying labor and materials for the prosecution of the work provided for, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue.

SIRS: Referring to your request of the 13th ultimo for a certified copy of the contract and bond of the Widell-Finley Company for the construction of schedule 2, main supply canal, Bellefourche project, South Dakota, you are advised that under the act of February 24, 1905 (33 Stat., 811), a certified copy of said contract and bond can be furnished only after the expiration of six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, and then only in case suit on the bond shall not have been instituted by the United States.

For your further information herein I inclose copy of a letter of the 28th ultimo from the Acting Director of the Geological Survey reporting upon your request.

Very respectfully,

First Assistant Secretary.

No. 4.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1906.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Replying further to your letter of May 16, 1906, regarding the claim of R. B. Whitacre & Co., of St. Paul, Minn., for $1,318.61, representing the value of 800 kegs of blasting powder furnished by that company to the Widell-Finley Company for their use in connection with the contract of the latter company on the Bellefourche project, South Dakota, I have to advise you that a statement has just been received from the engineer in charge of the project in regard to the matter.

The contract of the Widell-Finley Company provides that if for any reason the contractors fail to prosecute the work as required under the specifications, the Secretary of the Interior may suspend the contract and take possession of the machinery, material, and animals on the ground, completing the work at the expense of the contractor. The Widell-Finley Company failed to proceed with their work in accordance with the specifications, and the contract was therefore suspended by the Secretary of the Interior, all materials on the ground being taken possession of and used by the Government in the prosecution of the work. Among the material thus taken and used was a quantity of powder, amounting to 742½ kegs.

The engineer states that he does not know by whom this powder was furnished the contractors, or whether any of it was furnished by your correspondents. The protection of the interests of the Government makes it impossible for the United States to make direct payment of claims of the nature presented by Messrs. Whitacre & Co. Persons or companies supplying material or labor for use in connection with the construction of public works are given a complete remedy under the terms of the act of August 30, 1894, as amended by the act of February 24, 1905. (32 Stat., 811.)

Very truly, yours,

H. C. RIZER, Acting Director.

A. E. HORN,
Attorney at Law, 91½ Pioneer Press Building, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of October 11, inquiring as to the Widell-Finley Company contract on the Bellefourche project, and in reply will state that the work is being carried on by force account by the Government, but on account of the scarcity of labor it has not been completed as soon as we expected. It probably will not be completed before next spring. The scarcity of labor has increased the cost of this a great deal, and as the Widell-Finley Company had a very low price bid, in fact much lower than anyone could do the work, it is very probable that the extra cost will be more than the bond, although the exact figures can not be given until the work is completed.

Very truly, yours,

R. F. WALTER,
Engineer in Charge.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Blue Earth, ss:

Gustaf Widell, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he was a member of the company known as the Widell-Finley Company, which entered into a contract on the 26th day of April, 1905, with E. A. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, concerning the construction of main supply canal, Bellefourche project, South Dakota, the same being an irrigation project; that he has read the annexed letter (marked Exhibit A) bearing date November 25, 1907, addressed to Hon F. H. Newell, Chief of Bureau of Reclamation, signed by R. B. Whitacre & Co., but does not confirm its allegation as to knowledge of insolvency; that he has also read the annexed letter (marked Exhibit B) signed by H. C. Rizer, acting director, and addressed to Hon. F. C. Stevens, dated June 19, 1906; that said Whitacre & Co. furnished the powder to be used on said work, as set forth in said letter (Exhibit A), and that the powder referred to in said letter (Exhibit B) as taken and used by the Government to the amount of seven hundred forty-two and one-half (742½) kegs was a part of the powder furnished by said Whitacre & Co., to deponent's knowledge.

GUSTAF WIDELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23d day of November, 1908.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 556) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,' approved February 26, 1895," approved June 27, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act so as to read as follows:

That it shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell, at public auction at the land office of the district in which the land is situated, for not less than $1.25 per acre, any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain less than one-quarter section which, in his judgment, it would be proper to expose for sale after at least thirty days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such land may be situated: Provided, That this act shall not defeat any vested right which has already attached under any pending entry or location.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ODD FELLOWS' CEMETERY AT CENTRAL CITY, COLO.

The bill (S. 1197) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to set apart, from and out of the mineral lands in Eureka mining district, Gilpin County, Colo. (such lands having been heretofore returned to the land office at Central City as mineral lands), a tract of land not exceeding 7 acres in extent, therein described, to be used by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo., as a cemetery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAROLE OF UNITED STATES PRISONERS.

The bill (S. 4027) to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "day," to strike out "other than for life, except as hereinafter mentioned;" and after the word "than," at the end of line 10, strike out "six months" and insert "one year," so as to make the section read:

That every prisoner who has been, is now, or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against the law or laws of the United States and is confined in execution of the judgment of such conviction in any United States penitentiary, prison, or jail for a definite term of over one year and one day, whose record of conduct shows he has observed the rules of such institution and has been confined in same for a period not less than one year, may be released on parole as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 2, after the words "with the," to strike out "chief clerk, chaplain, and;" in line 3, before the word "general," to insert the article "a;" in line 6, after the word "clerk," to insert "of such prison;" in line 9, after the word "necessary," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the first meeting shall occur within thirty days after this act becomes operative, and that not more than ninety days shall elapse between the convening days of any two meetings of said board, and that at each meeting they shall act on all such cases that, under the provisions of this act, are entitled to a hearing at such time, and each and every prisoner confined in said prison, and who is within the requirements and meaning of this act, shall be entitled to and permitted to appear before said board at such meetings and apply in person for his release on parole.

And in lieu thereof to insert—

Provided, That in every case where a prison or jail other than a United States penitentiary is used for the confinement of such prisoners it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to designate the officers of said prison who, together with the general agent of the Department of Justice at Washington, shall constitute such board for said prison.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the warden of each United States penitentiary, with the physician of such prison, together with a general agent of the Department of Justice at Washington, D. C., shall constitute a board of parole for such prison, and the warden shall be president and the chief clerk of such prison shall be clerk of said board of parole, and the meetings shall be held at each prison as often as the warden of such prison shall deem necessary: Provided, That in every case where a prison or jail other than a United States penitentiary is used for the confinement of such prisoners it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to designate the officers of said prison who, together with the general agent of the Department of Justice at Washington, shall constitute such board for said prison.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 3, after the word "parole," to strike out "as hereinbefore provided;" in line 6, after the word "parole," to strike out "shall" and insert "may, in its discretion;" in line 7, before the word "after," to strike out "and;" in line 9, after the words "sum of," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "one hundred;" in line 13, after the word "conditions," to insert "including personal reports from such paroled person;" and in line 20, after the word "thereto," to insert "the said board shall in any parole granted fix the limits of the residence of the person paroled, which limits may thereafter be changed, enlarged, or limited as in the discretion of the board shall be deemed advisable: Provided, That no release on parole shall become operative until the findings of the board of parole under the terms hereof shall have been approved by the Attorney-General of the United States," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That if it shall appear to said board of parole from a report by the proper officers of such prison or upon application by a prisoner for release on parole that there is a reasonable probability that such applicant will live and remain at liberty without violating the laws, then said board of parole may, in its discretion, authorize the release of such applicant on parole, after he has executed a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $100, said bond to become forfeit only in event of such applicant violating the articles of his parole; and he shall be allowed to go on parole outside of said prison walls and inclosure, returning to his former home if he desire, but upon such terms and conditions, including personal reports from such paroled person, as said board of parole shall prescribe, and to remain, while so on parole, in the legal custody and under the control of the warden of such prison from which paroled and until the expiration of the term specified in his sentence, less good time allowed as is or may hereafter be provided for by act of Congress in relation thereto; the said board shall in any parole granted fix the limits of the residence of the person paroled, which limits may thereafter be changed, enlarged, or limited as in the discretion of the board shall be deemed advisable: Provided, That no release on parole shall become operative until the findings of the board of parole under the terms hereof shall have been approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 7, after the word "warden," to strike out "or said board or any member thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That if the warden of the prison or penitentiary from which said prisoner was paroled or said board of parole or any member thereof shall have reliable information that the prisoner so on parole has violated his parole and has lapsed into criminal ways, then said warden may issue his warrant for the retaking of such prisoner at any time prior to the period for which said prisoner might have been confined within the prison walls upon his sentence, less good time as is or may hereafter be provided for by act of Congress, which unexpired time shall be specified in said warrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 5, before the word "fund," to insert the article "the," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any officer of said prison or any federal officer authorized to serve criminal process within the United States, to whom such warrant shall be delivered, is authorized and required to execute such warrant by taking such prisoner and returning him to said prison within the time specified in said warrant therefor. Such officer, other than an officer of the prison, shall be entitled to receive the same fees therefor as upon the execution of a warrant of arrest at the place where said prisoner shall be taken as for transporting a convict from the place of arrest to the prison, such fees of the officer, other than a prison officer, and the expense of a prison officer in executing such warrant shall be paid by the warden and clerk of the prison out of the money received as proceeds from forfeiture of bonds as hereinbefore provided, if sufficient therefor, and otherwise out of the funds of the prison, while any surplus remaining from forfeiture of such bond shall be returned to the fund at such prison or use in other like cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 20, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. Life sentences, sentences of one hundred years, ninety-nine years, and all sentences for a period of more than twenty years, heretofore or hereinafter imposed on any person shall be construed and shall mean twenty years' imprisonment, which shall be the maximum sentence of imprisonment, the minimum sentence of which term of imprisonment shall be the same, less good time allowance, as is, or may hereafter be, provided by act of Congress; and said prisoners shall in all cases be entitled to the minimum sentence, except they forfeit a portion or the whole of said good time by misbehavior, of which a record shall be kept, the cause of the forfeiture and the good time forfeited by such misbehavior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 14, to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That whereas an emergency exists for the taking effect of this act at as early a date as information of its provisions can be made known, it is declared that the same shall be in force and effect from and after thirty days after its passage, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to transmit a true copy of this act to the proper authorities within fifteen days of the passage of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. This bill, Mr. President, is one of very great importance as affecting the result of the criminal jurisprudence of the United States. So far as my knowledge goes of legislation of this kind in this country, it is a novelty. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee reporting this bill to the Senate give the Senate some information as to the extent of the investigation that that committee made into this subject, the precedents, if there are precedents for such a statute, in order that the Senate—and I can speak for myself as needing information on this subject—may be informed.

Take the first section of the bill—

That every prisoner who has been, is now—

It relates not only to future trials, but to present and past ones as well—

That every prisoner who has been, is now, or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against the law or laws of the United States and is confined in execution of the judgment of such conviction in any United States penitentiary, prison, or jail for a definite term of over one year and one day, whose record of conduct shows he has observed the rules of such institution—

All these, to me revolutionary, provisions as to shortening sentence and the release of prisoners are made to depend upon the prisoner observing the rules of the prison.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest that that is to be read in connection with the first part of the third section, on the third page. If the Senator will read that in connection with the portion he has just quoted——

Mr. HALE. I have read that.

Mr. BACON (continuing). He will see that a good deal more is required than observance of the rules.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but that is the foundation. The bill continues:

May be released on parole as hereinafter provided.

I do not know but that it is better, after deliberate and solemn trial in the courts and the imposition of adequate and, it is to be presumed, not too severe punishment by the judge holding the court, who has a knowledge of all the facts and all the circumstances and all the guilt—I do not know but that it is good legislation to interfere with all that and to provide easy ways for the convicts to be entitled first to partial parole; but later in the bill I see provisions allowing complete deliverance from imprisonment and the visiting of homes and families, all upon the discretion and adjudication of narrow, quasi tribunals that are created by the bill to consider a question which has been passed upon by impartial juries and judges. Courts made up of jailors and doctors and minor officials will always have——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me again——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I will ask that he read in connection with that particular part upon which he is now commenting the proviso that no finding of this board can be carried into execution without the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. HALE. That does not meet my objection; in fact, that is of itself objectionable in conferring upon the Attorney-General a function which should not be placed upon him. The Attorney-General does not try these cases. They are all tried by subordinates. They are passed upon by judges and by juries, and I would not have the Attorney-General burdened with this most onerous new duty that will be imposed upon him.

If this bill passes, Mr. President, the cases that will arise under it will not be numbered by dozens or scores, but by hundreds, and the prisons, the places to which prisoners and convicts are consigned by the law, will naturally and inevitably be the scene of constant efforts to reduce or substantially destroy the punishment that has been imposed by the highest authority.

I have had no time to scrutinize in detail all the provisions of this bill, but I have read it once hurriedly, and I am apprehensive, Mr. President, of great trouble and mischief resulting from the passage of an act of the grave importance of this bill, particularly when the Senate is not full, and will not be full, to-day, and perhaps not to-morrow. I shall be very glad to hear from the chairman of the committee as to some of the considerations that moved that great and conservative committee which has had in charge the investigation of this subject.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Maine that the Committee on the Judiciary did not act hurriedly upon this matter. It is a subject which it has had under consideration for more than a year. Neither is it a new departure in the line of reformation or punishment of criminals. The bill, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, seemed to be called for because of the peculiar condition in the various penitentiaries in which the government prisoners are confined. So far is it from being a new departure that nearly all—I will not say "nearly all," but a majority—of the States in the Union have seen fit to place upon their statute books parole laws, nearly all of them much more liberal than that proposed by the bill now under consideration. I have here a list of some of the States, which I hurriedly took from my desk when informed that the bill was under consideration in the Senate—Kansas, New Jersey, California, Connecticut, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont, Ohio, Iowa, Georgia, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, Tennessee, Arizona, West Virginia, Massachusetts, Virginia. The roll is quite an extensive one of the States that have adopted laws similar to the one which is now proposed.

The attention of the committee was first called to this by a situation that occurred in Ohio—I have forgotten in which district, but I think in the northern district of Ohio—in which a United States prisoner was sentenced to one of their state reformatory institutions. He asked to be paroled under the operation of the state law and under the law which says that he shall be confined there according to the rules and regulations of that prison. The matter came before the United States district judge, who decided in favor of the prisoner. The United States, however, took no occasion to question that decision any further. The Department of Justice at Washington holds—and consistently has held—that, so far as United States prisons are concerned, the rules and regulations relating to the confinement do not apply to parole.

There are those upon this floor who have been governors of States where the parole system has been in operation and where it has given very great satisfaction.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.

Mr. HALE. We have in Maine legislation that mitigates the severity of sentence by a small percentage, dependent upon the good behavior of the prisoner. That law is said to have worked satisfactorily. But it does not take the convict on the say so of any parole board from the prison at any time after six months or a year or whatever time may be fixed in limitation and set him loose. I wish the Senator would tell me whether he has the record of any State that has a provision like this:

SEC. 3. That if it shall appear to said board of parole from a report by the proper officers of such prison or upon application by a prisoner for release on parole, that there is a reasonable probability that such applicant will live and remain at liberty without violating the laws—

A prisoner may be confined for the gravest and perhaps the most infamous of crimes, but if a board shall decide, notwithstanding he may be a hardened criminal, one who has served many terms, that he—will live and remain at liberty without violating the laws, then said board of parole may, in its discretion, authorize the release of such applicant on parole—

Remove him from prison, and—after he has executed a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $100.

Any bond. One hundred dollars is of no account. It is not a deterrent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator will surely understand the reason for that bond. He is certainly not arguing that question seriously.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think that bond is of any importance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The occasion of the bond is simply to reimburse the expenses incurred by the Government——

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (continuing). In conveying the prisoner back to the prison. I hope the Senator will not give that consideration.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that the taking of a bond will transform into a good citizen a hardened prisoner who has been sentenced by the courts.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator does not mean to use that as argument against this bill?

Mr. HALE. I think it is of very small importance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The bond is not intended for that, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. HALE. I do not consider it of any importance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No.

Mr. HALE. The bill provides:

Said bond to become forfeit only in event of such applicant violating the articles of his parole; and he shall be allowed to go on parole outside of said prison walls and inclosure, returning to his former home if he desire, but upon such terms and conditions, including personal reports from such paroled person, as said board of parole shall prescribe.

Now, I suppose I am old fashioned and too conservative, but a bill that takes the entire body of criminals, who have been convicted in United States courts, and on the say so and the importunity of a small board releases and allows convicts to be let loose upon the community, upon the belief that they will become good citizens, is to me the greatest of innovations and a very dangerous proceeding. I certainly can not vote for any such bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator asked me whether I could cite him to any State that had similar provisions. I can not off-hand give the exact provisions of any of the statutes of the States, but it is a safe proposition that all of the States which have passed parole laws have provisions similar to these, because if a parole law is to be passed at all, the parole power must be given to somebody. So far as I know, this measure guards it more strictly than the general state laws guard it, because after the board has acted (and one member of the board is an agent of the Department of Justice of the Government of the United States) the parole does not become operative until the findings have been approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Now, to my notion the parole law is simply a modification of the pardon law. There are cases where the President may not want to pardon a man absolutely, where the circumstances of the case and the man's character as it may have developed under punishment or reformation may be such that he would be glad to give him an opportunity to prove that he will be a good citizen. If, when under parole, he passes the surveillance of the Government, within such limits and areas as the board may see fit to impose, he is not molested. If he shows signs of relapsing into evil ways the law again takes control of him.

I can see nothing startling in it. I can see nothing in it that should shock the most conservative; and I think I am as conservative as is the Senator from Maine. But I do believe that we ought not to write over the doors of our reformatories, "He who enters here leaves all hope behind." Wherever such parole laws have been passed in the different States there is no desire to repeal them.

Mr. HALE. My impression is, although I do not set it against the knowledge of the committee—and the chairman says he can not state the experience under the parole laws—that it will be found that there are not many, or any, so complete nullifications of the results of criminal jurisprudence as are found in this bill. I should doubt whether it is good legislation and good policy to extend to convicts and criminals, because the Senator himself must bear in mind and his committee must bear in mind that the crucible through which the Government passes in order to get convictions is of itself of the severest kind. The presumption of innocence is always in favor of the accused. He is not sent to prison at all until that is overcome. The law's delays are all in favor of the accused, and when you have the final result of such trials as we have in this country under our legislation and in our tribunals, Mr. President, you have a class of criminals sent to prison who should not lightly, upon the say so of minor, irresponsible boards, be taken from prison and let loose on the community. The more I think of it the stronger is my objection to the whole proceeding.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am glad the Senator has at last finally convinced himself, but my impression is that his argument is directed quite as largely and strongly against the pardoning power as it is against the parole bill. In other words, Mr. President, that after a man has once been condemned by a court, that is an end finally to all his hope of restoration to liberty until the expiration of his sentence.

But the Senator wants to know how this system operates. We have as members of that committee Senators who have been governors of great States, where laws of this sort have been in operation, and there are in the Senate others, not members of the committee, who have been governors of States where such a law is in operation. I can say to the Senator that the members of the Senate who have most interested themselves in this bill are those members who have been governors of great States where they have seen such a law in operation, where they have seen its good working for the State, where they have seen its reformatory power upon the prisoner, where they have seen men go out through the portals of the penitentiary and become good and valuable citizens of the Commonwealth.

I should be glad to have the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSON] express their opinion upon the pending bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, there is no such novelty or innovation in this proposition as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] seems to indicate. Great Britain years ago, before we ever adopted such a system, adopted it in its criminal jurisprudence. You are all familiar with what they call a "ticket-of-leave" man. They would send their criminals to distant islands—Van Diemen's Land (Tasmania), and other places in the South Pacific—for a definite time, and then they would give them tickets of leave, put them on their good behavior, and in most instances they turned out to be good, faithful, and industrious citizens. Now, years ago——

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would listen to me until I get through with my main statement. Then I will answer him.

Mr. HALE. I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. NELSON. I had occasion when I was governor of Minnesota to study this system. We have the parole system there, and I took special pains to examine its workings and ascertain how it operated. We have there a state prison board, consisting at this time, I think, of seven or nine members. After a convict has been in prison for a year, if his record in prison has been good, his case can be brought before the state prison board. If they see fit, or think it is a worthy case, they can let the prisoner out on parole.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question right here?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Suppose a man has been sent up for life, having been guilty of willful murder——

Mr. NELSON. I was coming to such a case.

Mr. CLAY. Just one minute; and he has served one year. Does the Senator think we could afford to release on parole a prisoner who has served only one year and who had been guilty of the offense of murder, simply because his conduct in prison had been proper?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator had listened to me until I got through with my explanation, I was about to say that our parole law in Minnesota does not apply to life convicts.

Mr. HALE. Take a case of deliberate forgery or of some crime attended with the greatest violence, not murder. Does not the same reason and the same objection that evidently lie in the mind of the Senator from Georgia apply to a case of that kind?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. There are two views you can take of this matter. If the conviction of a criminal and the sending of him to prison are solely in the nature of punishment—in the nature of revenge, you may say—to make him sweat for his wrong, then of course there is some force in the argument. But the modern idea of criminal legislation is that we impose punishment upon criminals and convicts for the purpose of reforming them and ultimately making them better citizens. If you adhere to the old system, simply that the conviction of a criminal and the sentencing of him to prison is a mere matter of punishment and nothing else, then the doctrine of the Senator from Maine would apply. But if the object of such legislation and of such punishment is to reform the criminal and ultimately to make him a worthy citizen, so that he can earn his own living and not become a burden to society, then I submit that the parole system is justified.

Instead of going into an argument upon the elementary principles of this subject, I was about to explain briefly how it works in the State of Minnesota. In the state prison they had three classes of convicts—first, second, and third class. When a convict came there he was put into the second class immediately; and if in the course of a year or a greater time his behavior was good and exemplary, he was promoted to the first class—the higher class. Then the state-prison board would take his case and consider it; and if upon the facts of the case they thought it was just and proper to let that man out on parole, they would let him out on parole.

Mr. HALE. No matter what his offense may have been?

Mr. NELSON. It did not apply, as I said, to life convicts. I said aside from murder.

Mr. HALE. Outside of that, no matter how great the offense?

Mr. NELSON. In any case.

Mr. HALE. No matter how destructive his offense may have been to the peace of the community?

Mr. NELSON. In any case except where a man was sent to the penitentiary for life.

Mr. HALE. That is, the question which should decide whether or not the punishment should be continued was not the character of the criminal or the nature of the offense, but the fact that he had behaved himself for a year.

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. That was one of the elements. The board considered the record of the prisoner in the state prison; how he had acted and behaved; and in addition to that, the nature of the offense. The whole record was considered by the board. It was discretionary with the board.

Mr. HALE. They could act upon any offense?

Mr. NELSON. They had the jurisdiction to act upon any offense. The board, after a thorough and complete investigation, if they concluded it was a proper case to admit a man to parole, would grant a parole. The condition of the parole in Minnesota was that the man must enter into some useful employment, where he could earn his living, and he must report every month to the state prison board where he was, what he was doing, and what work he was doing, so that they could know exactly whether or not he was complying with the conditions of his parole. The moment he broke his parole in any shape or manner they would rearrest him and bring him back to prison, and he would be compelled to serve out the whole of his term.

Mr. HALE. What was the practical operation of that?

Mr. NELSON. The practical operation of that was that only in a very few isolated cases—they were so few, indeed, that it was an anomaly—did they ever have occasion to take a convict back.

Mr. HALE. They were practically set loose for life?

Mr. NELSON. They were practically set loose for life; and the result shows that they became good, useful, self-sustaining citizens and not a burden to society.

There was one reason in our State at that time—they have since modified the law—why they did not include life convicts, and that was on account of the Younger brothers, who had made an assault upon and killed a banker. On account of that the legislature for years was loath to include life convicts. They have since included them in the law, so that the board can grant paroles——

Mr. HALE. To persons convicted of capital crime?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; to any prisoner.

Mr. HALE. Parole a murderer?

Mr. NELSON. Parole a murderer.

The parole differs from the pardon system on the commutation of sentence in this: When the pardon power exercises its function it is absolute, it is final. If the President or the governor of a State sees fit to commute a sentence—and they often do—or to grant an absolute pardon, that is the end of it, whether the man pardoned or whose sentence is commuted turns out good or bad. But under the parole system it is entirely different. If a man does not behave, if he does not remain a good citizen, if he does not engage in some useful employment, so as not to be a burden to society, he is sent back to serve out his time; and in that respect I think it works far better than the system of the pardoning power.

We all know—and we need not disguise the fact—that criminals of high social standing, wealthy criminals who have powerful and strong friends, can appeal to the pardoning power. In many instances—and I have noticed it in years past—how easy it is for them to get at all events a commutation and a reduction of sentence. But the poor, ordinary convict, the common criminal, the ordinary thief, if you please, has no friends at court, and nobody can give him a show in that direction, and unless you have a law like this, he is in all cases obliged to serve out his term.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator on reflection will say that because a convict has wealthy friends it is a frequent occurrence that they make themselves so powerful that executive clemency comes in and frees those men.

The instances of that kind, Mr. President, are very rare. It is not true that great criminals are often released by pardon because they have at their control money and means of prosecuting their applications. The number of pardons and the number of commutations of sentences by the Executive in the Federal Government and in the state governments, so far as I know, are very small relatively to the number of convictions. I do not think the Senator wants to go on record as saying that the reason for this paroling generally of criminals is because rich criminals can easily get out. I do not think so.

Mr. NELSON. I think wealthy criminals or criminals who have a high social standing and what you may call "friends at court" have a much greater opportunity. I have noticed in recent years as to a large number or a considerable number of men who have been convicted of wrecking banks in one form or another, and where the court has given them a pretty large sentence, how easy it has been to get a commutation of sentence and a reduction of time.

Mr. HALE. Not many.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, a great many; and to my mind the worst criminal is the man who, holding a position of trust, wrecks a bank. I despise and condemn him more utterly than I do the ordinary thief who picks my pocket, because the latter is not in charge of a trust or a duty as is a bank wrecker.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator, but I do not believe that that man ought to be let out on parole.

Mr. NELSON. It is safer to leave it with a board of this kind than it is with a single individual. The prison board or whatever board has charge of the matter can consider the record. The man has been, as it were, on trial in prison. He has been there for a given period, and they know something about what is the probability of his becoming a reformed man, what is the likelihood of his turning a new leaf. They are better able to determine it than is the President, in the first instance, when the application is made to him. After they have passed upon the case they say to the man practically, by the parole, "We will let you go out. We will let you try to be an honest man and earn your living, and if you make a success of it you shall not serve out your time. If you fail, if you do not become a good citizen, if you are not faithful and do not earn your own living, then we will take you back to serve the balance of your time."

I have here a letter from a poor convict. I do not know the man. He is a federal convict in a state prison in California.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I may say to the Senator that I am not hostile to parole legislation, but here is a question that troubles me about the bill: It provides that after a prisoner has served one year and one day, regardless of the offense that he has committed, he may be paroled. Take a man convicted as a bank wrecker and sentenced to the penitentiary for fifteen years. He has committed a very serious offense against society. Under the provisions of this bill he can serve one year and one day and be paroled. You place him on the same footing that you place the ordinary mail clerk who commits an offense and is sent up for two years. He can be paroled at the expiration of one year and one day, and the bank wrecker can likewise be paroled. Should not the parole be fixed in proportion to the offense committed? In other words, if a man has been sentenced to the penitentiary for fifteen or twenty or twenty-five years, where great moral turpitude is involved, should he not be required to serve more than a year before he is paroled?

Mr. NELSON. In practice, that rule is applied by the board. The board simply have the discretion, after a man has served a year, to act; they are given jurisdiction of the case; but, as a matter of practice—that was my experience with our system—they always took into account the crime a man had committed, its character, and also the term for which he had been sentenced to prison. It was not a rule to parole at the end of a year, but they simply had that power. In the case of an ordinary criminal, sent up for two years or so, they might parole at the end of a year. If prisoners had been sentenced for many years, for long terms, having been guilty of serious crimes, they would not parole them.

Mr. HALE. But the discretion was left with the board?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. They could do it?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. They had the power. To illustrate the discrimination which exists between state convicts and federal convicts—and I noticed that particularly in our State, because we had a number of federal convicts sent up from the Indian Territory for stealing horses, etc.—I will read a letter I have this morning received from a poor convict in the state prison in California. This is his letter:

SAN QUENTIN, CAL., December 30, 1908.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON.

DEAR SIR: On December 19, 1908, of the Sixtieth Congress, second session, bill S. 4027 was reported on, with amendments, by the Judiciary Committee.

This bill appertains to the paroling of federal prisoners, and no doubt will be presented during the coming session of the Senate. I am a federal prisoner in the California state prison, and see men paroled every month by the board of prison directors.

The state convicts there, with whom the federal convicts mix, are paroled from day to day, while the federal convicts in that prison are utterly without hope.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to finish the letter?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator kindly read that sentence again? My attention was diverted.

Mr. NELSON. He says:

I am a federal prisoner in the California state prison, and see men paroled every month by the board of prison directors.

Mr. HALE. I wanted to get at that. It shows it is going on all the time.

Mr. NELSON. That is in the state prison in California.

Mr. HALE. They are being paroled all the time.

Mr. NELSON. From time to time, but it is a limited number when compared with the whole number of convicts.

Do you not think federal prisoners should have equal rights to parole? The fact that one made a false step in no sense indicates that a career of crime will follow. By the passage of this bill many men will be given an opportunity to start life anew and win the respect of their fellow-citizens. Will you give the merits of the bill your consideration and support?

Respectfully, yours, RAPHEAL CARUSO, 22539.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator know for what offense he is in prison?

Mr. NELSON. I do not know anything about it. I just got the letter by mail this morning.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. The letter causes me to ask a question. Does the Senator think the bill should apply to criminals who have been twice convicted for separate felonies, and would it not be applicable thus without amendment?

Mr. NELSON. It has been done under our parole system.

Mr. CARTER. I assume it would be wise to amend the bill so as to make it quite clear that its provisions would not apply to a person convicted more than once.

Mr. CULLOM. In any court?

Mr. CARTER. In any court, federal or state.

Mr. NELSON. This was the rule in our State. I did not go into all the details of it, because I entered into the discussion unexpectedly. If a man were sent to prison for a second or third time—and there were such cases—he did not get any benefit of the parole law. It was applied only to those who were sent there on the first conviction. Then we have in addition to that in our State, which is now a very useful aid in the parole law, a state agent whose business it was in a case where the board was contemplating letting a convict out on parale to find him a place where he could get employment and work and earn wages; and they never would parole a man in our State unless he had a place of employment. He must either find the place himself or get it through this state agent. He must find some man or some company in the State ready to give him permanent employment, and only in those cases could he get a parole.

I want to say to the Senator from Maine that whatever technical objections may be made, yet after all in these matters the best test of this matter is the test we get from practical experience. When I came into the office I was somewhat prejudiced against the system, and yet the more I saw of it and saw of its benefits and how well it worked, the more and more I became convinced that it was a just and proper system. I see my friend here, the former governor of California [Mr. PERKINS], one of my colleagues on this floor; I see before me the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], who has been governor of that State. I think all Senators who have had occasion to watch and be cognizant of the experience under the parole laws will say that they have worked well and wholesomely, for the good of the State and for the good of the convicts and for the good of society. We are simply inaugurating here in respect to federal business what a large number of the States have already adopted. I do not think that our own great Government of the United States ought to be in the rear in this great column of reform. I think we ought to recognize in our penal legislation and the punishment of criminals some of the modern principles that obtain, and that the great object of punishment is to reform people and make them better citizens.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, and if I am correctly informed, there are 34 States which have adopted a law of this character, and among them the State of Maine.

Mr. HALE. No; not of this character.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Georgia as to the State of Maine, I will state that the State of Maine has a parole law in fact. The governor of the State of Maine can issue a pardon with such conditions as he sees fit, which is absolutely a parole law, but it is surrounded by none of the safeguards which are included in the present measure.

Mr. HALE. That is entirely different.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And that includes every crime except only where the party has been impeached.

Mr. HALE. That is essentially different from a proposition which takes it away from the governor, who has the responsibility and who has hearings upon every case. That is entirely a different thing from setting up a minor board, a transitory board, and allowing it the discretion to relieve the convict from his punishment. It is a thing that in Maine is not going on as lands—Van Diemen's Land (Tasmania), and other places in the South Pacific—for a definite time, and then they would give them tickets of leave, put them on their good behavior, and in most instances they turned out to be good, faithful, and industrious citizens. Now, years ago——

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would listen to me until I get through with my main statement. Then I will answer him.

Mr. HALE. I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. NELSON. I had occasion when I was governor of Minnesota to study this system. We have the parole system there, and I took special pains to examine its workings and ascertain how it operated. We have there a state prison board, consisting at this time, I think, of seven or nine members. After a convict has been in prison for a year, if his record in prison has been good, his case can be brought before the state prison board. If they see fit, or think it is a worthy case, they can let the prisoner out on parole.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question right here?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Suppose a man has been sent up for life, having been guilty of willful murder——

Mr. NELSON. I was coming to such a case.

Mr. CLAY. Just one minute; and he has served one year. Does the Senator think we could afford to release on parole a prisoner who has served only one year and who had been guilty of the offense of murder, simply because his conduct in prison had been proper?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator had listened to me until I got through with my explanation, I was about to say that our parole law in Minnesota does not apply to life convicts.

Mr. HALE. Take a case of deliberate forgery or of some crime attended with the greatest violence, not murder. Does not the same reason and the same objection that evidently lie in the mind of the Senator from Georgia apply to a case of that kind?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. There are two views you can take of this matter. If the conviction of a criminal and the sending of him to prison are solely in the nature of punishment—in the nature of revenge, you may say—to make him sweat for his wrong, then of course there is some force in the argument. But the modern idea of criminal legislation is that we impose punishment upon criminals and convicts for the purpose of reforming them and ultimately making them better citizens. If you adhere to the old system, simply that the conviction of a criminal and the sentencing of him to prison is a mere matter of punishment and nothing else, then the doctrine of the Senator from Maine would apply. But if the object of such legislation and of such punishment is to reform the criminal and ultimately to make him a worthy citizen, so that he can earn his own living and not become a burden to society, then I submit that the parole system is justified.

Instead of going into an argument upon the elementary principles of this subject, I was about to explain briefly how it works in the State of Minnesota. In the state prison they had three classes of convicts—first, second, and third class. When a convict came there he was put into the second class immediately; and if in the course of a year or a greater time his behavior was good and exemplary, he was promoted to the first class—the higher class. Then the state-prison board would take his case and consider it; and if upon the facts of the case they thought it was just and proper to let that man out on parole, they would let him out on parole.

Mr. HALE. No matter what his offense may have been?

Mr. NELSON. It did not apply, as I said, to life convicts. I said aside from murder.

Mr. HALE. Outside of that, no matter how great the offense?

Mr. NELSON. In any case.

Mr. HALE. No matter how destructive his offense may have been to the peace of the community?

Mr. NELSON. In any case except where a man was sent to the penitentiary for life.

Mr. HALE. That is, the question which should decide whether or not the punishment should be continued was not the character of the criminal or the nature of the offense, but the fact that he had behaved himself for a year.

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. That was one of the elements. The board considered the record of the prisoner in the state prison; how he had acted and behaved; and in addition to that, the nature of the offense. The whole record was considered by the board. It was discretionary with the board.

Mr. HALE. They could act upon any offense?

Mr. NELSON. They had the jurisdiction to act upon any offense. The board, after a thorough and complete investigation, if they concluded it was a proper case to admit a man to parole, would grant a parole. The condition of the parole in Minnesota was that the man must enter into some useful employment, where he could earn his living, and he must report every month to the state prison board where he was, what he was doing, and what work he was doing, so that they could know exactly whether or not he was complying with the conditions of his parole. The moment he broke his parole in any shape or manner they would rearrest him and bring him back to prison, and he would be compelled to serve out the whole of his term.

Mr. HALE. What was the practical operation of that?

Mr. NELSON. The practical operation of that was that only in a very few isolated cases—they were so few, indeed, that it was an anomaly—did they ever have occasion to take a convict back.

Mr. HALE. They were practically set loose for life?

Mr. NELSON. They were practically set loose for life; and the result shows that they became good, useful, self-sustaining citizens and not a burden to society.

There was one reason in our State at that time—they have since modified the law—why they did not include life convicts, and that was on account of the Younger brothers, who had made an assault upon and killed a banker. On account of that the legislature for years was loath to include life convicts. They have since included them in the law, so that the board can grant paroles——

Mr. HALE. To persons convicted of capital crime?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; to any prisoner.

Mr. HALE. Parole a murderer?

Mr. NELSON. Parole a murderer.

The parole differs from the pardon system on the commutation of sentence in this: When the pardon power exercises its function it is absolute, it is final. If the President or the governor of a State sees fit to commute a sentence—and they often do—or to grant an absolute pardon, that is the end of it, whether the man pardoned or whose sentence is commuted turns out good or bad. But under the parole system it is entirely different. If a man does not behave, if he does not remain a good citizen, if he does not engage in some useful employment, so as not to be a burden to society, he is sent back to serve out his time; and in that respect I think it works far better than the system of the pardoning power.

We all know—and we need not disguise the fact—that criminals of high social standing, wealthy criminals who have powerful and strong friends, can appeal to the pardoning power. In many instances—and I have noticed it in years past—how easy it is for them to get at all events a commutation and a reduction of sentence. But the poor, ordinary convict, the common criminal, the ordinary thief, if you please, has no friends at court, and nobody can give him a show in that direction, and unless you have a law like this, he is in all cases obliged to serve out his term.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator on reflection will say that because a convict has wealthy friends it is a frequent occurrence that they make themselves so powerful that executive clemency comes in and frees those men.

The instances of that kind, Mr. President, are very rare. It is not true that great criminals are often released by pardon because they have at their control money and means of prosecuting their applications. The number of pardons and the number of commutations of sentences by the Executive in the Federal Government and in the state governments, so far as I know, are very small relatively to the number of convictions. I do not think the Senator wants to go on record as saying that the reason for this paroling generally of criminals is because rich criminals can easily get out. I do not think so.

Mr. NELSON. I think wealthy criminals or criminals who have a high social standing and what you may call "friends at court" have a much greater opportunity. I have noticed in recent years as to a large number or a considerable number of men who have been convicted of wrecking banks in one form or another, and where the court has given them a pretty large sentence, how easy it has been to get a commutation of sentence and a reduction of time.

Mr. HALE. Not many.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, a great many; and to my mind the worst criminal is the man who, holding a position of trust, wrecks a bank. I despise and condemn him more utterly than I do the ordinary thief who picks my pocket, because the latter is not in charge of a trust or a duty as is a bank wrecker.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator, but I do not believe that that man ought to be let out on parole.

Mr. NELSON. It is safer to leave it with a board of this kind than it is with a single individual. The prison board or

As to the transaction in question, I was personally cognizant of and responsible for its every detail. For the information of the Senate I transmit a copy of a letter sent by me to the Attorney-General on November 4, 1907, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 4, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Judge E. H. Gary and Mr. H. C. Frick, on behalf of the Steel Corporation, have just called upon me. They state that there is a certain business firm (the name of which I have not been told, but which is of real importance in New York business circles) which will undoubtedly fail this week if help is not given. Among its assets are a majority of the securities of the Tennessee Coal Company. Application has been urgently made to the Steel Corporation to purchase this stock as the only means of avoiding a failure. Judge Gary and Mr. Frick inform me that as a mere business transaction they do not care to purchase the stock; that under ordinary circumstances they would not consider purchasing the stock, because but little benefit will come to the Steel Corporation from the purchase; that they are aware that the purchase will be used as a handle for attack upon them on the ground that they are striving to secure a monopoly of the business and prevent competition—not that this would represent what could honestly be said, but what might recklessly and untruthfully be said. They further inform me that as a matter of fact the policy of the company has been to decline to acquire more than 60 per cent of the steel properties, and that this purpose has been persevered in for several years past with the object of preventing these accusations, and as a matter of fact their proportion of steel properties has slightly decreased, so that it is below this 60 per cent, and the acquisition of the property in question will not raise it above 60 per cent. But they feel that it is immensely to their interest, as to the interest of every responsible business man, to try to prevent a panic and general industrial smash up at this time, and that they are willing to go into this transaction, which they would not otherwise go into, because it seems the opinion of those best fitted to express judgment in New York that it will be an important factor in preventing a break that might be ruinous; and that this has been urged upon them by the combination of the most responsible bankers in New York who are now thus engaged in endeavoring to save the situation. But they asserted they did not wish to do this if I stated that it ought not to be done. I answered that while of course I could not advise them to take the action proposed, I felt it no public duty of mine to interpose any objection.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

After sending this letter I was advised orally by the Attorney-General that, in his opinion, no sufficient ground existed for legal proceedings against the Steel Corporation, and that the situation had been in no way changed by its acquisition of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company.

I have thus given to the Senate all the information in the possession of the executive department which appears to me to be material or relevant, on the subject of the resolution. I feel bound, however, to add that I have instructed the Attorney-General not to respond to that portion of the resolution which calls for a statement of his reasons for nonaction. I have done so because I do not conceive it to be within the authority of the Senate to give directions of this character to the head of an executive department, or to demand from him reasons for his action. Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

SALARIES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 638), which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a revised statement, prepared by the Committee on Grades and Salaries under the executive order of June 11, 1907, for the reclassification and readjustment of salaries in the executive departments, and estimates of appropriations based thereon.

The reclassification of employees should be authorized now, even if the additional appropriations suggested can not now be made. The existing classification does not meet the needs of the service. The basis of the reclassification is character of work rather than amount of salary; it would avoid the need of special positions and result in much higher efficiency.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. The Chair hears no objection and the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. RAYNER. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana if he will agree to let the bill go over until next week. I do not object to the reading of it; I do not care about that, but several of us desire to make some remarks on the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I do not expect a vote to-day on the bill. I presume it will go over, necessarily, until next week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "banks" and insert the word "depositories," so as to make the section read:

That there be, and is hereby, established a system of postal savings depositories, to be under the direction and supervision of the Postmaster-General, in conformity with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, line 11, to strike out the word "bank" and insert the word "depository," so as to read:

That each and every post-office within the United States which is authorized to issue money orders, and such others as the Postmaster-General in his discretion may from time to time designate, are hereby declared to be postal savings depository offices to receive deposits from the public and to account for and dispose of the same according to this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question in reference to this section. Does he prefer to go through the committee amendments first? I should like to ask the Senator why it is that in this section he provides for post-office savings depositories being established in money-order offices, and then later on he provides that the Postmaster-General may establish not only such offices but depositories at offices of the first, second, and third classes. Why would it not be better to be put in the first, second, and third classes in the first place and be through with it?

Mr. CARTER. The peculiar provision referred to at the close of the section has regard to the task of installing the system. In the nature of things, it will be quite impossible simultaneously to install the system in all parts of the country and in all the post-offices. Therefore the Postmaster-General is given by the bill opportunity for the gradual installation in such manner as will not demoralize or injuriously affect the postal service.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to inquire what is the status of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate. The formal reading of the bill was dispensed with by unanimous consent, and the bill is being read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. BAILEY. Then a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. As I understand it, the bill, of course, after the committee amendments or other amendments are disposed of, would still be open for debate in the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. It will also be open for amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no interest myself in the amendments. I have some interest in the general debate. I did not want to lose the opportunity of having a word to say against it. Of course I am perfectly willing, indeed, I would prefer, that the proponent of the measure should perfect it so far as such a measure can be perfected before we come to debate it.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to ask the view of the Senator from Montana further with reference to the part of the bill just read. In the bill, which I introduced some time ago, I provided that these depositories should be established only in the first three classes.

Now, if I understand the Senator's bill correctly, they can be established in any post-office as soon as the Postmaster-General desires to establish them. That is the situation, if I get the idea of the bill correctly.

Mr. CARTER. The bill provides that all the money-order offices and such other offices as the Postmaster-General may designate shall be postal depositories. The requirement is that the money-order offices shall be provided with postal depository machinery as rapidly as the Postmaster-General can install the same without injury to the service. I hope that answers the question of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; it does. The only object I had in asking the question was that it seems to me probable that this ought to be confined to the first three grades; for, if I understand the organization of the Post-Office Department correctly, the fourth-class postmasters are not under salary. They are not paid a regular salary. They provide their own rooms and their own equipment. It occurred to me that very possibly we ought to confine this at least to the first three grades and such others as the Postmaster-General may deem necessary.

There may be localities where a smaller place than one having a fourth-class post-office would need a savings bank. But it occurred to me, in framing the bill which I drew, that we ought to confine it to post-offices of the first three grades, because there the postmasters' salaries are paid; their buildings are supplied by the Government, and their equipment is more or less supplied by the Government. I therefore made the inquiry of the Senator if it would not be better to confine them to the three grades and such others as the Postmaster-General might determine, than to make them unlimited.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Nebraska will observe that the proviso near the close of section 2 reads:

That the Postmaster-General may, if he deems it necessary or more practical, establish at first postal savings depositories only at the money-order offices of the first, second, and third classes, and thereafter extend the system as rapidly as practicable to all other post-offices named above.

This will include, of course, ultimately a considerable number of fourth-class post-offices. While it is true that such postmasters are not now on the salary list, but are on commission, the bill makes provision for a commission to be paid to the fourth-class postmasters for the transaction of this postal-savings business.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 2, page 1, line 11, after the word "savings," to strike out "bank" and insert "depository;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "savings," to strike out "bank" and insert "depository;" in line 4, after the word "such," to strike out "bank" and insert "depository;" and in line 8, after the word "savings," to strike out "banks" and insert "depositories," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That each and every post-office within the United States which is authorized to issue money orders, and such others as the Postmaster-General in his discretion may from time to time designate, are hereby declared to be postal savings depository offices to receive deposits from the public and to account for and dispose of the same according to this act. Every postal savings depository office shall be kept open for the transaction of business every day (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) during the usual post-office business hours of the town or locality where such depository is located, and between such additional specific hours as the Postmaster-General may direct: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, if he deems it necessary or more practical, establish at first postal savings depositories only at the money-order offices of the first, second, and third classes, and thereafter extend the system as rapidly as practicable to all other post-offices named above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 14, after the word "savings," to strike out the word "bank" and insert "depository," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That accounts may be opened and deposits made in any postal savings depository established under this act by any person of the age of 10 years or over in his or her own name, by a married woman in her own name and free from any control or interference by her husband, by a trustee as such on behalf of another person, by a parent, guardian, or other person for the benefit of a child under 10 years of age.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move, in section 3, page 2, line 16, after the word "name," to insert the word "and."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 16, after the word "name," where is first appears, it is proposed to insert the word "and," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That accounts may be opened and deposits made in any postal savings depository established under this act by any person of the age of 10 years or over in his or her own name and by a married woman in her own name and free from any control or interference by her husband.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move as an amendment to the same section what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend, in section 3, page 2, line 17, by striking out all after the word "husband" and in lieu thereof to insert a semicolon and the words "but no person shall simultaneously have more than one postal savings account."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 4, page 3, line 1, after the word "savings," to strike out "bank" and insert "depository," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. The postmaster at a postal savings depository shall, upon the making of an application to open an account under this act and the submission of an initial deposit, deliver to the depositor a pass book upon which shall be written the name and signature or mark of the depositor and such other memoranda as may be necessary for purposes of identification, in which pass book entries of all deposits shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That at least $1, or a larger amount in multiples of 10 cents, must be deposited before an account is opened with the person depositing the same, but 10 cents, or multiples thereof, may be deposited after such account has been opened, but no one shall be permitted to deposit more than $200 in any one calendar month.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That at least $1, or a larger amount in multiples of 50 cents, must be deposited before an account is opened with a person depositing the same, but 50 cents, or multiples thereof, may be deposited after such account has been opened, but no one shall be permitted to deposit more than $100 in any one calendar month: Provided, That in order that smaller amounts may be accumulated for deposit any person may purchase from any depository office for 1 cent a postal savings card, to which may be attached specially prepared adhesive stamps, to be known as "postal savings stamps," and when the stamps so attached amount to $1 or a larger sum in multiples of 50 cents, including the 1-cent postal savings card, the same may be presented as a deposit for opening an account, and additions may be made to any account by means of such card and stamps in amounts of 50 cents, or multiples thereof, and when a card and stamps thereto attached are redeemed by any postmaster he shall immediately cancel the same. It is hereby made the duty of the Postmaster-General to prepare such postal savings cards and postal savings stamps of denominations of 1 cent, 5 cents, and 10 cents, and to keep them on sale at every postal savings depository office, and to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the issue, sale, and cancellation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to the end of section 7, line 24, page 4.

Mr. CARTER. In section 7, I move to insert a period after the word "thereof," in line 14, and then to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, page 4, line 14, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to strike out the comma and to insert a period and the following words:

Interest shall not be computed or allowed until the first day of the half year next following the day of such deposit and shall cease on the first day of the half year in which such deposit is withdrawn. Half years shall begin January 1 and July 1, and the computation of interest shall be based on the average balance during the half year: Provided, That the balance to the credit of any one person shall never be allowed to exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not want to see that amendment adopted, or a part of it at least, by unanimous consent. If I understand the amendment correctly, it provides that deposits shall not begin to draw interest until the beginning of the next half year after they are made, and that they shall cease to draw interest at the beginning of the half year in which they are withdrawn; in short, a depositor might put his money in and not begin to draw interest for five months and all the succeeding days but one of the six months. He might draw his money out and lose his interest for the five months back. It occurs to me that, instead of lengthening that time—the bill as the committee has reported it provides for quarters—we ought at least to draw it down to months. I do not think we ought to let a depositor wait for six months before he begins to draw his interest. I certainly would not want that portion of the amendment adopted. I could not quite catch the importance or the meaning of the rest of the amendment, and I want to understand the object of it; but it seems to me that a depositor ought to draw interest from the beginning of the next month after the deposit is made, and cease to draw interest at the beginning of the month in which it is drawn out.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the determination of the period of time within which interest balances shall be ascertained led to considerable discussion. It was finally determined that we could, without overburdening the department with clerical work, fix the period of one quarter as the basis for interest computation. But the department, upon more mature reflection, concluded that even this would involve almost prohibitive bookkeeping and details.

It must be borne in mind that the primary purpose of this legislation is to enable people to save small sums. We desire to furnish accommodations to that class of persons who are now penalized for safety's sake by being compelled to buy postal money orders at the rate of $3 per thousand in order that they may have their money where they consider it safe.

Interest will not be the main objective point of those patronizing the postal savings banks. If interest is the objective point, much better investments can be found and more remunerative rates of interest can be secured in many directions than in the proposed postal depositories. If we should undertake to compute the interest on each account monthly, the whole fabric here proposed would break down under a mass of details. The accounts will be small, the depositors numerous, and, in consequence, the clerical work would be very great if we undertook to compute interest monthly or quarterly as the bill now proposes.

The amendment gives to the depositor interest on his average balance for the period of six months, and in that it is a fair and just method of computation. We can not give interest on daily balances, nor can we give interest on monthly balances, because of the clerical difficulties to which I have referred.

The amendment which I have sent to the Secretary's desk was prepared by the Postmaster-General, who, after consulting extensively with his enlightened corps of assistants, determined that the bill as it is now framed, providing for the quarterly balancing of interest, would not be workable save at great expense. Hence, we report the amendment providing for a half-year interest period.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do I understand, as the bill now reads with the proposed amendment, that interest will be allowed for the first six months upon the average balance for those six months?

Mr. CARTER. That is what the amendment proposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The original bill provided for the payment of interest on the average balance for three months instead of six.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator now, Why is it proposed to amend this bill so as to provide, not for a 10-cent deposit, but for a 50-cent deposit, and also provide for stamps to be issued which might be deposited after the collection amounted to at least 50 cents? Why would it not be just as well to dispense entirely with a deposit of anything less than $1, so that all computations would be made on the dollar basis, instead of upon the half-dollar basis? That would do away with considerable of the clerical work; would be easy of computation by tables for interest and compound interest, and it seems to me that we would gain just as much, because we already have the provision for the purchase of stamps whenever any person wishes to get 10 cents' worth or even 1 penny's worth until the amount reaches the half-dollar limit.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the 10-cent deposit limit was raised for the purpose disclosed in the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] in order to avoid the bookkeeping connected with the receipt of these very small sums. After the bill was framed I took occasion to inquire extensively as to the amount of deposits received in other countries, and found that the franc, or about 20 cents, was the average of deposits received at the postal savings banks; that is, the minimum. Generally speaking, a larger sum is required by other countries for the opening of an account. In fixing the minimum deposit in this bill at 50 cents we will thus fix a minimum that is quite as much or more than the minimum provided by the laws of Canada, England, France, and Italy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I could see, Mr. President, why the minimum might be larger, in view of the fact that the Senator's own amendment has taken another method to meet that question; that is, by allowing in reality deposits from 1 cent up to $1 in the shape of stamps. The Senator must bear in mind that the wages paid to laborers here are from two to three and even four times what they are in France; and that the amounts that are used daily in the little purchases are from three to ten times as much. So I do not conceive that it would be any hardship whatever, especially as they can receive the stamps up to $1, to receive no interest-drawing deposits less than $1.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill while he is on the floor to explain why it is, if the Government is to pay interest on postal savings deposits, that the amount on which it can be paid is limited to $500 instead of $1,000?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the opposition to this bill throughout the country springs generally from the banking fraternity. It has been charged everywhere that the bill would become a refuge for debt dodgers; that the bank balances or deposits would be very largely impaired. In nearly every instance where such objection is urged the parties have said that if the maximum sum which would be received at the post-office were reduced, the main, the cardinal, the real objection to the bill would disappear. Yielding somewhat to that sentiment, and upon the urgent request of the Postmaster-General, the amendment reducing the maximum deposit from $1,000 to $500 was proposed and adopted.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question in regard to this section as amended. When does the interest begin? Assuming that the postal savings bank bill were a law, if a man deposited money in a postal savings depository to-day his interest, as I understand, would not begin until the 1st of next July. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CARTER. That is the correct understanding.

Mr. du PONT. It seems to me that is a long time to wait, and I was hoping that it could be arranged on a quarterly basis, but the previous remark of the Senator from Montana furnishes an answer as to that.

Mr. CARTER. The belief of the Postmaster-General and those with whom he has conferred on the subject is that the half-yearly basis of computation——

Mr. du PONT. I see the difficulty from the clerical standpoint——

Mr. CARTER. Was necessary in order to avoid multiplicity of accounts and statements.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I take it from what the Senator says that the enactment of this bill into a law is not so much for the purpose of giving interest to depositors—for the savings banks in the States are open for that purpose—but to draw from hiding money that never finds a place in any of the banks.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Illinois states the understanding I have with reference to the main object of this legislation. It can be summed up in two words. We want to extend to the struggling wage-earners and people in every locality in this country an opportunity to deposit their savings, coupled with perfect safety. We are not seeking to enter the commercial field in competition with banks.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator in the midst of what he is saying, but it occurs to me that this is a pretty serious matter. The Senator is quite right in saying that the opposition to this measure comes from the banking fraternity. Attempts have been made to defeat this legislation, but now that it seems it can not be defeated, they have undertaken to make the interest rate 1 per cent. I have had communications from bankers urging if this bill must pass that we cut the interest rate down to 1 per cent; that we delay the time of beginning to pay interest; and all that sort of thing. It seems to me the Congress is liable to do something here that may make the Government appear niggardly and the Congress ridiculous.

Suppose we reduce the interest rate to 1 per cent. No country on the face of the earth pays less than about 2½ per cent. How ridiculous Congress would be in responding to that demand. On the other hand, if we put off the day of beginning to pay interest for six months, that would be ridiculous. If we are going to have a savings-bank system, we can not afford to go before the people and say that because the computation of interest is going to involve some work on the part of the department, we will not begin to pay interest for six months after a deposit is made.

The Senator has confused, in his remarks at least, the time when interest shall be computed and the period during which interest should be paid. I do not know of anybody who expects that interest is going to be computed monthly. It can be computed annually; but we ought to begin to pay interest within less than six months after we take the people's money, if we are going to pay interest at all, and we ought not to refuse to pay interest for six months back when a man withdraws his deposit. Should we do so, we would make this ridiculous, it seems to me. If the Postmaster-General has got it through his head that this is going to make so much work, he should have thought of that, in my opinion, before he started and launched the matter.

If we are going to enact a postal savings-bank law, let us not do these little things that will make the Government appear both niggardly and ridiculous. I do not think we ought to put a provision in here cutting off interest until six months after the deposit is made and six months before it is withdrawn.

I have not been able to catch, perhaps, the full import of the amendment, and as the Senator does not expect to have the bill passed to-day and the amendment has not been printed, would he object to letting the amendment lie on the table until the bill is taken up the next time? Then the amendment can be printed, and we can all have an opportunity to see it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is my desire to have the bill reprinted with the amendments offered to-day and adopted.

Mr. BURKETT. Could not the Senator have it reprinted with this amendment appearing at the proper place in the text and marked as pending?

Mr. CARTER. As pending?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That would be acceptable.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want the amendment acted upon now.

Mr. CLAY. With the permission of the Senator from Montana, I want to call his attention to page 6. I believe I called attention to this feature in the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that, as he understands it, the Senator from Montana moves to strike out all after the word "thereof," in line 14, down to the end of section 7, and to insert the matter contained in the proposed amendment.

Mr. CARTER. That is the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to page 6 of the measure. The Senator will remember that I thought these words ought to go out of the bill when we originally considered it. I have not changed my mind about it.

The words I have reference to are as follows:

After their receipt from depositors they shall be exempt from demand, garnishment, execution, attachment, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor thereof. Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or any State.

I suggest to the Senator that if a citizen deposits his money with the Government in a State, I doubt whether we have the authority to exempt it from state taxation; and if we do have the authority to do it, I doubt whether we ought to do it.

I come again to the question of debts. Take a citizen who deposits two hundred or three hundred or five hundred dollars of money with the Government. It strikes me that that money ought to be subject to his debts just like the other funds of an individual. And I will say to the Senator that when section 10 is reached I shall propose to strike out those words, and I hope in it to have the support of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I can not promise to support the proposition of the Senator, but I shall address the Senate briefly on the subject when the matter comes up.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks that by merely striking out that provision, which furnishes a proposal to exempt from garnishment these deposits, he would leave them so that they would be subject to such process?

Mr. CLAY. I hardly think so. I think there would have to be further provision made. I doubt whether one could garnishee or attach funds in the hands of the Government without an express provision.

Mr. FULTON. I think in order to subject money in the hands of the Government to garnishment or attachment there would have to be some direct provision authorizing it. But I call the Senator's attention, if he will permit me——

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. To this point. One hundred dollars a month may be deposited as a maximum, as I understand, under the bill. Now, is there anything illogical in exempting that from garnishment and attachment, in view of the fact that postmasters' salaries—I guess they will average more than a hundred dollars a month, or that amount, anyway, in money-order offices—are not subject to attachment? Why should we render these deposits subject to attachment?

Mr. CLAY. The Senator will remember that all of the States, so far as I have been able to investigate, have provided exemption laws allowing citizens a certain amount of property—in some States $500 and in others as high as $1,600—and the funds so set apart are not subject to debt.

Now, it is a right serious problem for Congress to undertake to say what property of a citizen in a State shall not be subject to taxation or debt. Each State ought to provide a system of exemption, and each State has done so, and Congress ought not to undertake to say what property shall not be subject to the debts of the citizen or what property shall not be subject to taxation in a State.

Mr. FULTON. I submit to the Senator that that is purely a question of public policy. We are seeking by this bill to bring out of hiding a certain amount of money that we know is in existence but not in commercial channels, not available for commercial use. It is a small amount in the possession of each individual hidden away in some place under his control. At the present time it does not enter into commerce. It is not subject to taxation, because it is not reached. I do not suppose a dollar of the money that will be brought into sight by this bill to-day pays a cent of taxes in any State of the Union.

Mr. CLAY. I doubt that statement, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. Let me say to the Senator I think there is probably no character of property which pays so slight a proportion of the burden of taxation as actual money. I think that is the experience of man. It is so easy to hide money, so easy to keep it out of sight, so easy to evade taxation of it that that is the result.

We are appealing by this bill to a vast army of holders of small amounts of money, who are keeping it out of commercial channels, and we are inviting them to deposit it with the Government. I do not see why there is anything illogical in exempting it from taxation. Every State, as the Senator says, does by law provide that certain property shall be exempt from taxation. A certain amount of household property, certain wages earned but not yet paid, are exempt from garnishment; and it is not unreasonable, to my mind, if we enter upon this scheme to invite the small depositors to bring their money out where it can be used, to offer an inducement that it shall not be subject to taxation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator that under existing law, if there were nothing whatever in the bill relating to garnishment, the Government could not be garnisheed.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. The Senator from Georgia concedes that.

Mr. HOPKINS. That has been the policy of the Government from time immemorial.

Mr. FULTON. To exempt from garnishment.

Mr. HOPKINS. So there is no new policy adopted in this bill.

Mr. FULTON. No State or municipality or division of any State, as, of course, we all know, can be subject to garnishment unless there be some positive provision of law therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before we pass from the subject which has been discussed, I want to understand better the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Montana. I understood him to say, in answer to my question, that interest would be computed upon the average balance during the preceding six months; the computation would not be made until the expiration of six months, but when that computation was made, it would be upon the average deposit during those six months. Subsequent inquiries seem to indicate that no interest whatever is to be computed upon the first six months' deposit. Now, is that a correct understanding?

Mr. CARTER. Interest is really computed annually. In order to ascertain the amount of interest due to an individual, however, we divide the year into two parts, the first part extending from the 1st of January to the 1st of July, and then from July to January again. When a deposit is made, if this amendment should be adopted, there will be no computation of interest for a fraction of six months—for that fraction of the six months remaining between the date of the deposit and the beginning of the next half year.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand there will be no computation for a fraction of six months; but what I want to understand is whether or not, if a man has on deposit an average, say, of a hundred dollars for the first six months, at the end of those six months, the beginning of the next half, he will be given what is equivalent to 1 per cent upon that average balance of $100 during those six months, or whether no computation will be made and no interest will begin until the expiration of the six months.

Mr. CARTER. No credit is made for interest except annually. This amendment must be taken, of course, in connection with that which precedes it:

SEC. 7. That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be computed, allowed, and entered in the pass book to the credit of each depositor once in each year, and shall be added to and become a part of the principal; but such interest shall not be computed or allowed on any amount less than $1 or some multiple thereof. Interest shall not be computed or allowed until the first day of the half year next following the day of such deposit and shall cease on the first day of the half year in which such deposit is withdrawn. Half years shall begin January 1 and July 1, and the computation of interest shall be based on the average balance during the half year.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I understand that correctly, it means for six months there will be no interest whatever, no matter what the deposit is during the first six months. Why is that?

Mr. CARTER. If the depositor withdraws his money before the expiration of the year, he does not receive interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. But that is not what it means, if I understand the reading correctly. It means that whether he withdraws it before the expiration of a year or not no interest will be computed or allowed—because the word is "allowed"—upon the deposit that preceded the second part of the year.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly the balance would be increased by subsequent deposits, and interest would be paid on the total deposits, including that which accumulated during the previous six months.

Mr. McCUMBER. For how long a time?

Mr. CARTER. For that year.

Mr. McCUMBER. The way the amendment reads it would not be allowed upon the first half year's deposits.

Mr. CARTER. Not if the deposit had been drawn out.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, even if it had not been drawn out. It would not be allowed upon the first half year's deposit. Will the Senator please read that portion?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Interest shall not be computed or allowed until the first day of the half year next following the day of such deposit——

Mr. McCUMBER. That means if he commences to deposit in January and continues a deposit which amounts on the average to a hundred dollars for the first six months that interest will not be allowed upon the hundred dollars until the beginning of the next six months. It will not be allowed from the beginning, but will commence to be computed at the end of the first six months.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator is referring again, as I understand, to the question of allowing interest for a fraction of the six months which will intervene between the date of the opening of the account and the arrival of the first day of the next half year. We do not allow interest on the fraction of six months.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, let me ask the Senator a question right here. Suppose a man deposits a hundred dollars on the 2d day of January and draws it out on the 30th day of December; how much interest would he get under your amendment?

Mr. CARTER. He would get interest for six months.

Mr. BURKETT. If it does not begin to draw interest until the first day of the next six months and ceases to draw interest on the first day of the six months in which it is withdrawn, I do not see how he would get any interest.

Mr. HOPKINS. In order to get at the proper interpretation of the amendment, I would ask the Senator in charge of the bill to suppose a depositor deposits a hundred dollars on the 1st day of May. As I understand, he does not draw interest until the first day of July. Suppose the deposit is taken out on the 1st day of December. Does he get any interest at all?

Mr. CARTER. There would be no interest on that deposit.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the difference between that man and mine? He puts his in on the 2d day of January and draws it out on the 30th of December. How would he get any interest?

Mr. CARTER. If he deposits his money the 2d day of January and draws it out prior to the arrival of the 1st of the following January, he would get no interest.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator will have to change that statement, because the 1st of January is a holiday generally, and I think they would recognize the 2d of January as the first day of the year, and he would get six months' interest.

Mr. CARTER. Under that construction he might be entitled to interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 8, line 3, page 5, to strike out "bank" and insert "depositor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, it seems to me the effect of this bill will be to prevent depositors from withdrawing their money when they are absent from the place of deposit, a privilege which is one of the chief advantages of the postal savings-bank system in other countries. Under this bill a depositor away from home would have to return home in order to draw his money at the post-office. The system which obtains in England and France is an immense advantage to all those people who are not permanently domiciled or who are earning their livelihood temporarily away from their homes; for instance, seafaring men, people working for contractors. It applies to a very large class of people who are temporarily domiciled at different points. The system has worked very successfully in England and in France, and there is no reason why it can not be applied here.

Again, by special postal convention between France and Belgium, this state of things exists: A Frenchman who has deposited funds in a French postal saving bank can go to Belgium and withdraw his funds from any postal savings bank in Belgium, and vice versa.

So I think this section should be amended, and I shall propose the amendment which I send to the desk, which I ask may be printed with the bill, to be voted on at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 9, line 13, after the word "interest," insert the words:

Either at the postal savings depository where the funds were deposited or at any other such depository.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be included in the reprint of the bill and be regarded as pending.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in section 9, page 6, line 2, after the word "savings," to strike out "bank" and insert "depository," so as to read:

The postal savings-depository system.

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend the section by striking out all after the word "prescribe," in line 22, page 5, and inserting in lieu thereof:

No national bank or other bank in which postal-savings funds shall be deposited shall receive any exchange or any other fees or compensation on account of the cashing or collection of any checks or the performance of any other service in connection with the postal-savings depository system.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Montana to make provision by amendment for the distribution of these postal deposits in other banks than national banks?

Mr. CARTER. An amendment has been prepared with that object in view. While I am not authorized by the committee to accept the amendment, I can see no objection to it and shall not resist it when offered.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator that one of the largest sources of criticism of the bill in the West appears to be that it might operate as discrimination against banks outside the national banking system, and if an amendment enlarging the list of banks or institutions in which the deposits are made, properly secured, should be inserted in the bill, it would relieve it of much of the criticism that has arisen in some sections of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was going to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Iowa that I have prepared an amendment to section 11 along the line that the Senator suggests, and when that section of the bill is reached I hope to have his attention and his support for the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Let me ask the Senator from Montana a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. Are postal funds at present deposited in other than national banks?

Mr. CARTER. Postal funds are not deposited in other than regular national-bank depositories.

Mr. KEAN. Are any funds of the United States deposited in other than national banks?

Mr. CARTER. I am not aware that that is the case.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator is through with his amendment, I want to call his attention to line 14, on page 5:

All the withdrawals of deposits may be made in even dollars unless the account shall be closed.

It seems to me there ought to be inserted there the words "unless it be for accrued interest." I think the bill provides that at the end of each year the interest shall be computed. The depositor may want to draw out the accrued interest, and it may not be in even dollars. It seems to me there should be a provision for withdrawals other than in even dollars, not only in closing an account, but for accrued interest, if the principal is desired to be left.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Nebraska will agree that owing to the very large number of accounts and the small amounts that will necessarily be involved—as common experience shows—it is necessary for purposes of ready computation to adhere as strictly as possible to the decimal system.

Mr. BURKETT. I think the Senator does not catch the point I am trying to make.

Mr. CARTER. The even dollars?

Mr. BURKETT. It would save bookkeeping to draw out other than even amounts when it is accrued interest, rather than to leave an uneven amount to go on to the next year. In line 14, on page 5, the bill provides that all the withdrawals must be made in even dollars unless the account shall be closed. My idea is that we should provide for an amount other than even dollars if it is to draw out accrued interest. For example, at the end of the year, let us say that the interest amounts to $4.27. Under the Senator's bill the depositor could draw out only $4 interest and must leave 27 cents to be added to the principal of a hundred dollars, say, and be computed. I think it would be better to permit him to draw out all of his accrued interest at the end of the year if he wants to, even though it is a fraction of a dollar, and leave his principal sum even during the next year.

Mr. CARTER. The bill contemplates the computation of interest annually without any solicitation on the part of the depositor. That will be done by the department as a matter of course. And elsewhere the bill provides that the interest shall be added to and become a part of the principal. I can readily understand the point made by the Senator with reference to odd cents, but the bill of necessity would have to be recast in other directions in order to carry out that suggestion.

Mr. BURKETT. You would only have to say, in line 17, "or it is accrued interest."

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if as a matter of fact the language as it appears in the bill would not permit the drawing out of all the interest. It seems to me that "all withdrawals of deposits" has reference to the previous sentence. The previous sentence says:

> Any depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds deposited to his or her credit, with the accrued interest.

Then the next sentence says:

> All withdrawals of deposits must be made in even dollars unless the account shall be closed.

But the "even dollars," I take it, refers to the deposit, money actually deposited, and of course the bill has said before that he may withdraw that and the accrued interest as well. So it seems to me that the language as it reads would authorize him to draw out the deposit in even dollars and the interest whether it was in even dollars or not.

Mr. CARTER. That construction might be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 5, line 22, after the words "may prescribe," strike out the remainder of the section and insert:

> No national bank or other bank in which postal savings funds shall be deposited shall receive any exchange or any other fees or compensation on account of the cashing or collection of any checks or the performance of any other service in connection with the postal savings depository system.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 6, line 3, to strike out "bank" and insert "depository," so as to make the section read:

> SEC. 10. That postal savings depository funds are hereby declared to be public moneys and subject to the safeguards and preferences provided by statute therefor. After their receipt from depositors they shall be exempt from demand, garnishment, execution, attachment, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor thereof. Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or any State, and no person connected with the Post-Office Department shall disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of his or her deposit, unless directed so to do by the Postmaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend section 10 by inserting in line 10——

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator to let the section go over. I want to prepare a new section.

Mr. CARTER. Very good. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect it.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to the amendment, but I want to prepare a new section for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 10, after the word "State," insert the words "county or municipality," so as to read:

> Such funds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States or any State, county, or municipality, and no person connected with the Post-Office Department shall disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of his or her deposit, unless directed so to do by the Postmaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 10 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 6, line 15, to strike out "bank" and insert "depository," and on page 7, line 9, to strike out "bank" and insert "depository," so as to make the section read:

> SEC. 11. That the Postmaster-General shall, as herein provided, deposit postal savings depository funds in national banks to be designated by him, at a rate of interest not less than 2½ per cent per annum. Such deposits shall be made in national banks in the States and Territories in which the funds are received, and when possible in the counties in which such funds are received, and, as far as practicable, in the immediate vicinity of the places at which funds are so received. If any bank in which such funds are so deposited shall become insolvent, such funds shall be a prior lien upon its assets and shall be first paid, to the exclusion of all other indebtedness of every kind and nature whatsoever. Where it is not practicable to deposit such funds in the counties, States, or Territories where they are received, they may be deposited in national banks at the nearest practicable points thereto or invested in state, territorial, county, or municipal bonds to be selected by the Postmaster-General with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General. Interest and profits shall be applied first to the payment of interest accruing to depositors in postal savings depositories as hereinbefore provided, and the excess thereof, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury as part of the postal revenues. For the purposes of this act the word "Territory" as used herein shall be held to include the District of Columbia, the district of Alaska, and Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to offer an amendment to section 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the section——

Mr. CARTER. I think it will come in after the word "whatsoever," line 1, page 7.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well, after the word "whatsoever."

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 1, after the word "whatsoever," insert:

> Where it is not practicable or desirable to deposit such funds or any part of the same in national banks in the counties, States, or Territories where they are received, they may be deposited in the state banks in such counties, States, or Territories, taking as security therefor, on approval of the Postmaster-General, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any regularly organized county, municipality, or State, or of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to propose this amendment because it would not be proper or right to take the funds from local post-offices deposited by the people and deposit them in the national banks remote from the home of the depositor. It would be a discrimination against the community where the deposit originated, and it would be very unfair to the people in that vicinity. I have a telegram from the commissioner of banking in Michigan, showing the character and importance of state banks, which reads as follows:

> LANSING, MICH., December 15, 1908.
> Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
> Michigan has 361 state banks and 6 trust companies. These have a total capital of $21,600,000 and deposits of $206,340,000.
> H. M. ZIMMERMAN,
> Commissioner of Banking.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator state how many savings banks there are in that number?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are all savings banks. There are many communities in our State where there are no national banks. It would be very unfair and very unjust to collect these deposits from the post-offices and then cart them off into rival communities for the purpose of deposit in national banks, when state banks are locally available and equally substantial.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I am in hearty sympathy with the spirit of the amendment he proposes, but it seems to me that it throws too severe restrictions around banks other than the national banks. I really do not see any reason why a national bank should be given any preference over any other bank that the Government thinks is entirely safe and responsible; and I would let them in on an equal footing, with some safeguards, of course, as to ascertaining their soundness. But the language the Senator has employed rather indicates that only where they can not find satisfactory national banks shall the other banks be given the privilege of receiving these deposits. I do not think that ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will pardon me, I used the language employed in the amendment because it seemed to be the best I could do with the committee having the bill in charge. I talked the matter over with several Senators, and they thought this amendment a great improvement over the original bill, but there are some States where the examinations of state banks are not thorough and not satisfactory, where there is no good system prevailing. In those States lacking appropriate legislation I can conceive of deposits being made without security to the detriment of many of the depositors.

In the State of Michigan we have a system of examination that is far better than the national system. It is more thorough, more complete, and ample time is given to the examination of the state banks. The result is that our banks are prosperous and numerous. As this telegram from the commissioner of banking says, there are $206,000,000 of the people's money in those banks alone. I do not want to have those banks discriminated against in the deposit of these funds, if we can help it.

Mr. FULTON. Has not the Senator discriminated against them?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think not; I want to make all deposits of this fund absolutely safe and secure, whether made in a state bank or a national bank.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Michigan, in answer to the inquiry made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], that the Federal Government having no control whatever over these state banks, it would be necessary, if we are to utilize them in this bill, to require restrictions and obligations upon those banks which are not exacted from national banks.

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator that the restrictions might be placed on some other basis than the language here employed would indicate. For instance, the language is—

> Where it is not practicable or desirable to deposit such funds or any part of the same in national banks.

That puts up a fence against the depositing in a state bank and renders it very rare that it would occur.

Now, to obviate what the Senator suggests—and I suppose there might be no objection to it—let it provide that when they offer approved security, or something of that character, they shall be given an equal opportunity with national banks to get the deposits.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would the Senator from Oregon suggest that such language be employed as would be mandatory upon the Postmaster-General to deposit these funds pro rata in all the banks of the country?

Mr. FULTON. I would not make it mandatory.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I simply seek to prevent any discrimination against communities and against state banks properly supervised.

Mr. FULTON. I think language may be framed which would put them on the same footing, the conditions being such as to warrant the deposit.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, this amendment is too important to be adopted without mature deliberation, and I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he have his amendment printed, and that this paragraph be passed over for the time, so that we can look into it carefully. Then if we find, as suggested by the Senator from Oregon, that it is imperfect, we will have an opportunity to perfect it before it becomes a part of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am in thorough sympathy with the state banks' desire for a portion of the deposits, but do not want to commit the Federal Government to a proposition that is merely enterprising and not absolutely safe in its character.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator from Michigan will liberalize his amendment very much indeed. I can see no reason why you should discriminate against state banks. I believe upon the whole the examinations in the state banks throughout the United States are just as thorough as they are in the national banks. If it is the object of the bill to keep the money in the town or place where it was collected, and there should be nothing but a state bank in that place, then I can see no reason for exacting from them a security different from what you would exact from the national banks.

Now, if you compel the state banks to get municipal or other bonds, the chances are a hundred to one that they have got to send the money to New York or some other large city in order to purchase the bonds to give the necessary security.

You may allow them to use such security as the Secretary of the Treasury may require, whether it be a bond that is given by individuals or whether it be a bond given by a security company, and then have a mandatory provision that the money shall be deposited in that city or town to the credit of any one of the banks that will take it on the 2 per cent, and in such proportion as their capital may be, or what other provision the Secretary may prescribe by the rules, but I certainly can see no reason why you should exact from the state banks a security and exact from national banks nothing whatever, when in many instances they are not as solvent as the state banks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me a word, there is no uniformity either in law or regulation with respect to state banks throughout the country. They vary as the legislation of the various States varies. If there was uniformity of law in their organization, if there was uniformity of rule with reference to their regulation, management, and supervision, we might, by a general provision, liberalize the amendment. But that is not the case. I wish we might have uniformity among the States affecting all banking privileges.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him right there——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not believe there is a state bank under proper supervision and regulation of law that has not in its possession as a part of its assets a very large proportion of its deposits in real-estate mortgages, and bonds of one kind and another.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can answer that in my own State, where we have a great many state banks and national banks, none of them carry municipal bonds in their possession or anything of that character, because the value of money in that section of the country is so much greater, and the interest is so much greater, that all those securities are sent east and find their markets in the great cities of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You carry a portion of your assets in real estate?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; they are not allowed to carry their assets in real estate, except for the bank building, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In our State we are obliged to carry 51 per cent in real-estate security.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not the rule in most of the States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think in a good many of the States they are obliged to carry a proportion of assets in tangible real-estate mortgages, and in that respect state banks differ from the national banks.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would not help out any in giving the security necessary to get the deposits. There will be nothing gained if you have got to turn into another channel an equal amount of money in order to get the deposits from that particular post-office.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The more I think about it the more I believe it is the only good plan to require the same character of security from all the banks and make no distinction in regard to them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. State and national?

Mr. FULTON. National and state, and require each one of them to give approved security for the deposits. Then the one that can make the best showing and offer the best inducement will get the deposits. I do not see why there should be any distinction between state and national banks. As the Senator says, we know that many of the very best banks in the country in every State are what we call private banks or state banks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But there is a distinction between state and national banks, and the bank that bids the most for deposits is not always the safest depository for trust funds.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly, there is a distinction between them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is an inherent distinction, and a great difference in management.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; but we need not recognize it if they give the same security.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But we must recognize it. We are legislators, not bankers.

Mr. FULTON. There is a distinction, of course, but it is not a distinction that need interfere if we require them all to give the same class of security.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My sole purpose is to perfect this legislation with impartiality.

Mr. CLAPP. I had supposed that that phase of the question was settled for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know how it is settled. It goes over under the rule.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator must have adopted what I said if he thought it was settled.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to offer an amendment. The suggestion was made that this section should go over, but before that I wanted to offer an amendment to another part of the section when this is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of section 11, the following words:

Where it is not practicable or desirable to deposit such funds or any part of the same in national banks in the counties, States, or Territories where they are received, they may be deposited in the state banks in such counties, States, or Territories, taking as security therefor, on approval of the Postmaster-General, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any regularly organized county, municipality, or State, or of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the amendment be printed and that it go over with the other amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed in the reprint of the bill as pending.

Mr. CLAPP. I have talked with the chairman of the committee on this subject. Complaint has come to me that under the bill as it is framed now the department might make the same rule that they make with regard to depositing public funds to-day, limiting the amount of deposit by the capital of the bank. They might not do it in this case, but I think to put it beyond any question I should submit an amendment. It comes in after the word "received," in line 22, page 6.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, page 6, line 22, after the word "received," insert:

In selecting the bank in which a deposit is to be made, such bank shall be selected without regard to the capital stock thereof.

Mr. KEAN. Ought it not to be the amount of capital stock?

Mr. CLAPP. I will change that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the amendment may go over.

Mr. BURKETT. I understand that all the amendments are going over that are offered, outside of the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as pending, under the rule. The amendments can not be acted upon now.

Mr. BURKETT. It is my understanding that all the amendments offered, outside of the committee amendments, are pending, and go over under the rule.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is apparent that we have now met the vital part of the bill, and I have an amendment which I desire to propose. I ask that it be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask that the words "amount of the" be inserted, so as to read "without regard to the amount of the capital stock thereof."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be included in the reprint. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. CUMMINS. It also refers to section 10, but it may be considered together.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 10 and also to strike out section 11 and to substitute therefor the following:

SEC. 10. That the Postmaster-General shall as herein provided deposit postal savings depository funds received at the post-office in any city, town, or village in the bank or banks organized under the national law, or a state or territorial law and doing business in such city, town or village; and if in any such city, town, or village there be no such bank, or if the funds have been received at a post-office not within a city, town, or village, then in the nearest bank or banks in the State or Territory: Provided, however, That no depository funds shall be deposited in any bank organized under a state or territorial law unless the laws of the State or Territory in which it is located require public supervision and examination: And provided further, That such examination shows the bank to be solvent not only as to creditors but with unimpaired capital.

Before a deposit is made in any bank as above authorized the bank shall agree to pay interest thereon computed upon the daily balance at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum. Each bank receiving deposits under the authority of this act shall, from time to time, give such suitable bond or bonds, with surety or sureties, to be approved by the Postmaster-General, as will indemnify the Government against loss. If the banks herein described as the banks in which the funds are to be deposited refuse to accept a deposit or deposits upon the terms and conditions above prescribed, then and in such case the Postmaster-General may use any bank designated by him and complying with said terms and conditions for such deposit or deposits; or he may invest the same in state, territorial, county, or municipal bonds, to be selected by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General. Interest and profits shall be applied first to the payment of interest accruing to depositors in postal savings depositories as hereinbefore provided, and the excess thereof, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury as part of the postal revenues. For the purposes of this act the word "Territory" as used herein shall be held to include the District of Columbia, the district of Alaska, and Porto Rico.

Strike out the figures "12," in line 15, on page 7, and substitute the figures "11."

Strike out the figures "13," in line 25, on page 7, and substitute the figures "12."

Strike out the figures "14," in line 9, on page 8, and substitute the figures "13."

Strike out the figures "15," in line 21, on page 8, and substitute the figures "14."

Strike out the figures "16," in line 8, on page 9, and substitute the figures "15."

Strike out the figures "17," in line 1, on page 10, and substitute the figures "16."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to have the amendment printed and lie on the table to be offered later?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to have it printed as the other amendments which have been proposed, and that it lie on the table to be considered at a future time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed with the reprint of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill, as amended, be printed, and that the reprint include the amendment to section 7 marked by brackets so as to indicate that the amendment is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, page 7, line 1, after the word "whatsoever," it is proposed to insert the following:

Where it is not practicable to deposit such funds in any national bank or banks in the counties, States, or Territories where they are received they may be deposited on the terms and conditions herein above provided in any state bank, savings bank, or other banking association organized under the laws of the State or Territory where the deposits are received, whenever such banking association shall make application therefor and shall furnish security consisting of United State bonds or the bonds of any State, county, municipality, or Territory, or any other security which may be satisfactory to the Postmaster-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if the amendments of the committee have all been adopted?

Mr. CARTER. All except one that will be printed in the text in the appropriate place, marked "pending."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that there are some pending committee amendments to the bill in the paragraphs of the bill not yet reached in the reading. The reading has not been completed beyond section 11.

Mr. CARTER. The committee has no further amendments to offer beyond section 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are several amendments indicated in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. They are formal amendments, changing the word "banks" to the word "depositories." I ask unanimous consent that those formal amendments be considered as agreed to all the way through the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the formal amendments referred to will be considered as agreed to. The bill will be printed with the pending amendments appropriately indicated.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Montana to yield to me for a moment. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the comparative number of banks of all classes in the United States in 1900 and 1908. There seems to be quite a misapprehension in some quarters as to the banking facilities of the people of the United States. We have 25,000 banks in the United States to-day. We had about 11,000 eight years ago. At the present rate of increase, I think there will be but very few communities in the United States which will not soon have adequate banking facilities. I ask that the statement I hold in my hand may be printed in the RECORD and also as a document. I make the same request as to the letter from the Postmaster-General, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the table and the letter submitted by him be printed in the RECORD and also as a document. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement and letter (S. Doc. No. 637) referred to are as follows:

JANUARY 4, 1909.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with the request made when you called at the department a few days ago, I take great pleasure in sending you herewith a table showing the respective growth during recent years of the postal and other savings deposits of foreign countries.

In order to appreciate thoroughly the significance of the statistics brought together in this table, it is necessary that the rate of interest paid by postal savings banks in each of these countries should be taken into consideration. It will be found that wherever the postal savings banks are operated on a conservative basis the deposits in private savings banks have multiplied with great rapidity—usually much faster than those of the postal savings banks. It should also be borne in mind that the deposits in private banks, as shown in the table, are, except for the United Kingdom, savings deposits only and do not include the vastly larger amounts held on deposit by banks handling commercial accounts.

Mr. A. de Malarce, a political economist, in his "Historical Development of Post-Office Savings Banks," demonstrates that savings institutions fostered by private enterprise may exist and prosper side by side with postal savings banks. He says:

"It is worth mentioning in this connection that in a good many of the aforesaid countries the other well-administered savings banks have not ceased to prosper and to show steady progress, especially among the town populations, for instance in France, where the number of clients of private savings banks has risen from 4,199,228 to over 6,500,000 since the opening of the post-office savings bank in 1882."

I find that postal savings banks cater to a class of people distinct from those who patronize private institutions, and it is probable that a majority of these people would not deposit their savings at all but for the special facilities provided by their governments. To fully elucidate this point, I have only to quote from the 1907 report of the Comptroller of the Currency:

"That postal savings banks are favored by the smaller depositors is shown by comparison of the average deposit in postal savings banks and all savings banks combined in those countries where both classes of institutions exist. Thus, in Austria the average savings account in the postal savings bank is only $22.39, against $187.32 in all savings banks. In Finland the average deposit in postal savings banks was $18.79, against $100.33 in all savings banks; in France $53.90, against $74.03; in Hungary $24.78, against $239.84; and in Russia $66.95, against $94.13."

If a corroboration of the comptroller's statement were needed, it could be found in this excerpt from L'Union Postale for September, 1904, relating to conditions in Austria, which typify those existing in many other countries:

"If the depositors are classed according to social position and profession, the largest participation is by children, school children, and students, who form 44 (1890, 48) per cent of all the depositors, which agrees with the above-mentioned preponderance of depositors below the age of 30. Artisans and laborers, with 14.3 (1890, 13) per cent, are more numerously represented than any other calling. Domestic servants also, with 8 per cent (as in 1890), form a not inconsiderable fraction of the clientele of the savings bank; 4.5 per cent of the deposit books belong to married women and widows; 2.1 per cent of the depositors are military men. State and parochial officers represent 1.5 per cent. The remaining 25.6 per cent are distributed among the members of a great variety of professions and callings, none of which, however, are especially predominant.

"These statistics prove that the savings bank finds special favor with the young. The number of children and school children who in 1893 made request for deposit books was 54,713.

"Of the above-mentioned books issued to youthful depositors, 432,839 were still in use at the end of 1893. The percentage among these books of accounts closed (39 per cent) is less than the usual percentage of accounts closed (46 per cent), a fact which shows the favorable influence which the impulse to save, given in youth, exerts in promoting constant habits of saving. The gratifying participation of youthful depositors which gives promise of good results in the future is ascribed in no small degree to the thankworthy efforts of the teachers and post-office officials. Namely, the rural letter carriers collect deposits when on their rounds. In 1893 they collected 42,452 separate sums, with a total value of 1,294,041.60 florins; in 1890 27,762 sums, value 962,376 florins."

A copy of a table showing rates of interest paid by the postal savings banks of foreign countries, which was originally compiled for Senator Carter, and formed part of a speech delivered by him in the Senate, is inclosed.

In Sweden alone, so far as I am able to learn, has there been any sustained decrease in postal savings deposits. The table made up for you shows a decrease in seven years of $2,512,445, and in the same time deposits in private savings banks increased $53,032,441. This appears to be primarily due to conditions which are epitomized in the following, taken from page 17 of the last annual report:

"Extract from an official report entitled 'Post-Office Savings Bank of Sweden in 1899:

"'Whereas in each of the fifteen previous financial years the amount of deposits exceeded that of the withdrawals, in 1899, on the contrary, the latter exceeded the former by not less than 6,132,286 crowns (a crown being equal to 26.8 cents). This unfavorable result is due on the one hand to the fact that private banks now also accept small deposits on terms much more advantageous than those of the post-office savings bank, as they allow depositors to withdraw higher sums without giving notice in advance. Accordingly a number of depositors who had invested their savings in the post-office savings bank when the rate of interest was higher than in private banks withdrew their capital to invest in the latter banks.'"

In Japan there has been an apparent decrease in seven years of $12,281,113 in the deposits of private savings banks, but this showing is probably largely the result of important changes in the banking system of Japan and the raising of their war loan.

The composite experience of other countries can not but confirm the wisdom of the provision in the proposed bill for the establishment of postal savings banks, which fixes the rate of interest at 2 per cent per annum.

Believe me,
Faithfully, yours, GEO. V. L. MEYER.

Hon. JULIUS C. BURROWS,
United States Senate.

Mr. PILES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, page 6, line 22, after the word "received," it is proposed to insert:

Where there are two or more national banks in the immediate vicinity each of such banks shall be designated as a depository, and deposits shall be made therein ratably according to their capital and surplus: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall require the Postmaster-General to make such deposits in any bank which he may deem to be unsafe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is frequently alleged, and I believe bankers sincerely believe, that the postal savings system which we here propose would injuriously affect the existing banks of the country. This is a prediction only, and, in order that the effect of like institutions upon the banks of other countries may be the better understood, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a statement showing the amount of postal depository funds and the amount of deposits in other banks, from 1898 to 1905, inclusive, in Austria, France, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Russia, Sweden, the United Kingdom, Canada, Japan, New South Wales, and New Zealand. A perusal of this paper will show that in actual experience, where the postal savings system exists, the banks are stronger, measured by their deposits as related to population and wealth, than before the adoption of the postal system.

I have likewise a table containing data showing the rate of interest, the minimum deposit allowed, the maximum deposit drawing interest, and the maximum of one account in the respective countries to which I have just referred. I ask that these tables be printed in the RECORD, following the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the Senator also——

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to inquire of the Senator from Montana whether I did not hear him suggest an executive session.

Mr. CARTER. I was about to make that motion, but I yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator is going to make that motion I will not do so.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before that is done, I will ask the Senator from Montana if he will also have the figures that he has just presented to the Senate printed as a public document, so that we can have them in more convenient form than in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the tables presented by the Senator from Montana will be printed in the RECORD without reading——

Mr. CARTER. And also as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And without objection, they will be printed as a public document.

The tables referred to are as follows:

[g] There is but one bank in New Zealand which may be properly termed a savings bank—the Savings Bank of Victoria—and it is operated in conjunction with the postal savings banks. Concerning this state of affairs a recent British official report states: "On June 30, 1905, the Savings Bank of Victoria, with which have been amalgamated the post-office savings banks, had 54 banks and branches with 328 agencies at post-offices in the States."

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] asked to have a statement printed in the RECORD. I have a statement which I had made up including not only the number of banks, but also the number of money-order post-offices and the population by States, the number of savings-bank depositors and the average deposits. I should like to have this printed also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the statement presented by him be printed in the RECORD without reading. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 6, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the District of Columbia appropriation bill, making appropriations for the expenses of the District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25392) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves all points of order on the bill, which bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice I will call up this bill for consideration to-morrow morning.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to call the next committee.

When the Committee on Military Affairs was called,

ARMY OFFICERS WITH INCREASED RANK.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 653.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank.

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the army on the retired list whose rank has been, or shall hereafter be, advanced by operation of or in accordance with law shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment, I do not know the line in the Senate bill, but to insert after the word "Army" the words "Navy and Marine Corps" so that it will read, "officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, after the word "Army," insert the words "Navy and Marine Corps."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the amendment is offered I wish the gentleman would give the reasons for the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish he would give the reasons and also the result.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Under the act of April 23, 1904, officers of the army who have served in the civil war, whether on the active or retired list, were advanced one grade. In other words, a captain became a major, with rank, pay, and allowances. The navy had already passed a bill of this kind affecting the naval active officers and afterwards passed one affecting retired officers. Now, those who are on the active list of the army get this rank, pay, and commission and those on the retired list get the rank and pay, but have no commission. Now, officers of the army on the retired list would like to have a commission. It does not increase the rank or pay. The Naval Committee requested the same action in regard to the officers on the retired list of the navy and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, I think, all the other members of the committee, united in requesting this amendment being offered, and said if I would notify them when it came up they would be glad to offer it. It places all on an equality and has no effect except to give a commission and the rank and pay to which the Congress of the United States has already advanced them.

Mr. MANN. If the Congress has advanced them to this rank, why do not they have a commission? What is the purpose of the bill? I have read this bill and read the report of the War Department, but can not get it through my head yet what they want and why they want it and what good it will do.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The purpose of the bill is——

Mr. MANN. I can not get it through my head yet what they want.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It gives them a commission. It gives them no additional pay. It gives them a commission the same as if they had been on the active list.

Mr. MANN. Take the case that was referred to in the newspapers a few days ago, and will the gentleman tell us how it will operate in that case? The papers stated a few days ago that a certain officer of the army had been declared to be incapable physically of promotion in the army, and thereupon he was ordered retired because of his physical incapacity at a higher grade than he then had, in order that he might accompany the President to Africa, where I suppose physical capacity is as much required as in any other place. Is it possible under existing law for such a thing as that to occur, or is that a newspaper mistake?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say that as far as this bill is concerned it would not affect that case in the slightest degree one way or the other. The man he refers to has no civil-war record. If the gentleman will remember, we passed an act that was approved April 23, 1904, as follows:

That any officer of the army below the grade of brigadier-general, who served with credit as an officer, or any enlisted man in the Regular or Volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, otherwise than as a cadet, and whose name is borne on the official register of the army, and who has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, or on account of age or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement.

Now, the case the gentleman refers to has nothing whatever to do with this bill, and under no circumstances could he be a beneficiary of it.

Mr. MANN. That may be a matter of argument.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is positive about it, I will take his assurance, and perhaps he will give further assurance then. The statement in the papers was that this man had been retired, on three-quarters pay, I suppose, at an advanced grade; and that he was now ordered to duty at his full pay at the advanced grade in order to accompany the President to Africa. I take it that it is not possible, not intended, and that it was a newspaper story, but I would like the authority of the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman, under the laws of this country, if a man serves up to the time he is entitled to promotion and a vacancy occurs, and he is not able to discharge the duties on account of physical disabilities, he is promoted to that and retired at the grade he has earned by service. That is the case, probably, of this officer. That is the present law. The case we are legislating on now refers to those officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who had creditable service in the civil war otherwise than as a cadet.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to get the gentleman to deny this libel on the President.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman wants me to deny something I do not know anything about.

Mr. MANN. Is it possible under the existing law to advance a man one grade on the ground that he is physically incapacitated, retire him on three-quarters pay, and thereupon immediately order him to accompany an ex-President of the United States, on full pay, at an advanced grade, in some foreign country?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is possible to retire him at an advanced grade if he has earned the grade before being retired and served right up to that. It is not possible, in my judgment, to order any retired officer on any duty of that character.

Mr. MANN. Or any officer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Or any other officer. No; I should say he had no power, and yet it is hard to tell just where the limitation comes on the power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to order an officer anywhere or a ship anywhere. The President has entire charge of it.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not think the President has issued any such order. I was calling attention to the newspaper report that the present President had ordered an army officer to accompany the ex-President after the President's term had expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would say not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Perhaps he discovered some miraculous cure after he got his promotion.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is a very common thing for officers who have served right up to the time and are entitled to the grade on retiring. The only question, as I understood the gentleman from Illinois, was, Has this order been taken some advantage of? I should say not. I do not believe it has.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it has. I believe it is a libel on the President.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I have not heard of anybody being placed in the "Ananias Club" on account of it, and I thought I would ask for information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you should go to work and credit every statement that has been seen in the newspapers, the membership of the "Ananias Club" would be a majority and the rest of us would be in a bad fix. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Does this bill deal with officers of the civil war who are not graduates of the Military Academy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. By this bill do you place all such officers who served in the civil war, on the pay roll of the Government, on the retired list?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, sir. Those who served during the civil war and were then appointed to the Regular Army and served in the Regular Army until they were retired are now on the retired list as of the Regular Army.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not this bill place the men who served in the civil war as officers, and performed valiant services for the country, who were not appointed officers in the Regular Army, but have been making their livelihood by other means since the war—why were they not included in this proposition? Are they not entitled to it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would be impossible to include all the officers that the gentleman speaks of in a bill of this character.

Mr. MADDEN. Why?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This bill is only to give commissions to men who already have the rank and pay as retired officers. It simply provides for issuing a commission to them, for a position Congress has already given them. The other bill deals with a very different proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Why?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is to create another line of officers on the retired list, practically another retired list. This simply gives these men a commission for a position of which they have the regular rank and pay now.

Mr. MADDEN. So that you have already given them retired pay and now wish to commission them as officers one grade above their rank while in the service. What is the need for that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If they had to give up the rank and pay to get the commission, they would say, let the commission go.

Mr. MADDEN. And yet the men in the volunteer service of the country during the civil war, who rendered as valiant service as these men, who were not assigned to the Regular Army and placed in positions similar to the ones they occupied in the civil war, are still ignored and no action taken for their relief.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I happen to be one of those men myself. There is a bill pending before the Military Committee of the House and Senate creating an additional retired list of the army and navy of the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Why is it that that bill has not been reported?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because a majority of the committee did not believe it to the best interests of the Government.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And it would mean ultimately $100,000,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not that much.

Mr. MADDEN. But you are giving officers already on the retired list additional honors, and yet the men that I have spoken of have not been given any consideration whatever.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We had passed a bill giving them the increased rank and pay, and the War and Navy departments claimed that it was not necessary to issue them a commission at that time, and this bill is simply for the purpose of issuing them a commission for the position of which they already have the rank and pay.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to see the veteran officers of the civil war taken care of, and I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will report in favor of placing them on the retired list.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I shall be delighted to have the eloquent voice of my friend from Illinois raised in defense of that bill when it is up for consideration; but until it comes before the House it is hardly a subject for discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title of the bill by inserting after the word "Army" the words "Navy and Marine Corps."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by inserting after the word "Army" the words "Navy and Marine Corps."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will resume the call of committees.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was called.

CERTAIN SHAWNEE AND DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 14399) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine the amount due certain Shawnee and Delaware Indians of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and it is hereby, conferred on the Court of Claims of the United States, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court, to determine the amounts of the losses sustained by the individual Shawnee and Delaware Indians in the years 1861 to 1866, inclusive, by depredations against their property at the hands of United States soldiers and white citizens of the United States while said Indians were peaceably and in amity with the United States occupying their own reservations in Kansas and the Indian Territory.

SEC. 2. That said court in determining said losses shall hear evidence as in other cases within its general jurisdiction and rules, and shall also consider the evidence taken by Indian Agent Abbott mentioned in the letter of date January 23, 1867, by Lewis V. Bogy, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to Hon. O. H. Browning, Secretary of the Interior, and filed in the Court of Claims in the suit of Johnson Blackfeather, principal chief of the Shawnee Indians, against the United States, No. 1710; and all the evidence duly taken in said suit shall be considered by the Court of Claims in determining said losses.

SEC. 3. That said Indians may within six months from the approval of this act, through a committee of three of their number selected by themselves, after notice of thirty days in the principal newspapers published nearest their homes, file their petition in said court, setting up their losses and sue for the same.

With the following proposed committee amendments:

On line 5, page 1, after the word "to" and before the word "determine," insert the words "find, adjudicate, and."

On line 12, page 1, after the word "Territory," insert the words "and render judgment therefor against the United States in favor of such individual Indian, his or her heirs or legal representatives, as hereinafter provided."

On line 12, page 2, after the word "said," insert the word "individual."

After line 17, page 2, add:

"SEC. 4. In rendering the judgments provided for in section 1 of this act against the United States in favor of the individual Indians, the court shall ascertain and fix the just amount of attorney's fees in each case, under any written contracts by them executed, and in its decree set apart the same out of the amount due to each individual Indian and cause a separate judgment warrant to issue to the claimant and his attorney in full payment for his services in this behalf to such individual Indian, his heirs or legal representatives."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the bill that it does not properly belong on the House Calendar, but does belong on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Rule XXIII, clause 3, provides that all bills referring claims to the Court of Claims shall be considered in Committee of the Whole; also, that all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people shall be considered in Committee of the Whole. The purpose of this bill is to confer on the Court of Claims authority to determine the amounts of losses sustained by certain claimants, and at the top of page 2 the proposed committee amendment says:

And render judgment therefor against the United States in favor of such individual Indian, his or her heirs or legal representatives, as hereinafter provided.

A similar bill was before the House yesterday, except that in that bill there was not a direct reference to the Court of Claims. The Speaker yesterday held that where a bill authorizes a judgment to be entered against the United States it involves a tax upon the people, and hence must be considered in Committee of the Whole; but this bill expressly provides for reference of claims to the Court of Claims and comes within the provisions of clause 3 of Rule XXIII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not, Mr. Speaker. I found the bill on the House Calendar. I have not looked at it closely. I intended to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY], the introducer of the bill, and to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCGUIRE], who reported the bill, to discuss the merits of it. I had not recently read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill will be referred to the Union Calendar.

SHAWNEE TRAINING SCHOOL, SHAWNEE, OKLA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House resolution 384, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas, a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, calls up a House resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House resolution 384, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives of the United States the names of the employees at the Shawnee Training School, at Shawnee, Okla., giving the sex of each employee and the compensation paid each; the total annual appropriation and expenditure made for the said school; a description of all the buildings at said school and how occupied January 1, 1908; the maximum attendance for 1907; the name of the tribe or band to which each of the several Indian pupils belong; the cost of buildings, and of any water, sewer, or lighting plant; the total number of enrolled Indians under the jurisdiction of the superintendent in charge of said school, and the tribe, sex, and place of residence of each of said Indians; the number of Indian allottees within said jurisdiction who are now citizens of the State of Oklahoma and were actually residing upon their original allotments January 1, 1907, giving the number of each allotment so occupied, and state the number of children said allottees have in said training school, and the counties of their respective residences.

And he is further requested to advise the House whether or not Indians of any other tribe or tribes than the Shawnee, Pottawatomie, and Kickapoos have been enrolled to attend the said school during the years 1906 and 1907; and if so, the number and to what tribe they belong, and whether or not their parents have their lands allotted to them and are voters and citizens of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read the resolution substituted by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, having considered House resolution 384, which reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives of the United States the names of the employees at the Shawnee Training School, at Shawnee, Okla., giving the sex of each employee and the compensation paid each; the total annual appropriation and expenditure made for the said school; a description of all the buildings at said school and how occupied January 1, 1908; the maximum attendance for 1907; the name of the tribe or band to which each of the several Indian pupils belong; the cost of buildings, and of any water, sewer, or lighting plant; the total number of enrolled Indians under the jurisdiction of the superintendent in charge of said school, and the tribe, sex, and place of residence of each of said Indians; the number of Indian allottees within said jurisdiction who are now citizens of the State of Oklahoma and were actually residing upon their original allotments January 1, 1907, giving the number of each allotment so occupied, and state the number of children said allottees have in said training school, and the counties of their respective residences.

"And he is further requested to advise the House whether or not Indians of any other tribe or tribes than the Shawnee, Pottawatomie, and Kickapoos have been enrolled to attend the said school during the years 1906 and 1907; and if so, the number and to what tribe they belong, and whether or not their parents have their lands allotted to them and are voters and citizens of the State of Oklahoma."

reports the same back to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution just read be substituted for the original resolution.

Mr. MANN. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that this is precisely the same resolution that was read, word for word and letter for letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposed amendment is word for word like the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This was substituted by a subsequent bill.

Mr. MANN. Then this is the amended resolution?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I ask for the passage of the original resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the original resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for information as to what is the cost of educating Indians at this special school in Oklahoma. This is a nonreservation school. We are spending a great deal of money in different parts of the United States in these nonreservation schools, and I believe the Government should adopt the policy of transferring the nonreservation schools to the States and Territories where they are situated and make industrial schools of them for the whites as well as the Indians. We can in that way educate the Indians and whites together. A great many of the Indians are already citizens of the United States, or at least their parents are, and some of them are voters and some officeholders. I see no reason why we should make any distinction between the red man and the white man. After the Indian becomes a citizen and voter, the State and not the United States should educate them. Since Oklahoma has been organized as a State this Shawnee nonreservation Indian school, and all other Indian schools having in them children of citizens of the State, should be educated by the State. These schools cost us a great deal of money, and it should be paid by the State, and thereby become a part of the educational system of the State. Let this Government have the same right to control the schools as they are now exercising in the agricultural and mechanical schools in the States where they are situated. I ask for the information mentioned in this resolution in order to base upon it a bill that I propose to bring before Congress for the purpose of transferring these nonreservation schools to the various States and Territories wherever they may be situated. The information is to be directed to that purpose.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He has stated that he proposes to bring in a bill relating to all nonreservation schools in the country. This resolution applies to only one school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; but it is for the purpose of getting information relating to the general proposition that we now have under consideration; and I believe its best solution would be to transfer the nonreservation schools to the States and Territories where the schools are situated.

Mr. OLMSTED. What nonreservation schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All of the nonreservation schools in the United States. This is one of them, and by getting the information that is here called for we can ascertain what this kind of schools are costing the Government, what kind of buildings they have, and whether it is practicable to transfer them to the States and Territories.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it the gentleman's idea that data pertaining to this particular school covered by this resolution shall be used as a basis to determine the question as to all nonreservation schools in the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will give us a great deal of light on that question, because each State has been doing its best to get the largest appropriations and the best buildings possible for Indian schools, and I presume that the cost of educating the children in this Shawnee Indian school would be about an average of the rest of the nonreservation Indian schools in the States and Territories.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can not the gentleman or any of us ascertain, by looking at the published report of the Indian Commissioner, how many pupils there are in a particular school, how much it is costing the Government, and all of these facts pertaining to the schools which the gentleman calls for in this resolution?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That published information would not show whether they belonged to the same tribe or not or whether the parents were citizens of the State.

Mr. OLMSTED. It would show whether it was a reservation or a nonreservation school, and show the cost of maintenance, the cost of the buildings, the number and extent of the buildings, and all the information which this resolution calls for except the possible question as to how many are Shawnees and how many belong to other tribes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would not give all the information we desire, but this resolution would give that information and place the matter more fully before Congress and before the country. It is a matter of great interest to the country. I do not think they are longer needed, and I believe that the proper policy would be to transfer them to the States and Territories in which they are situated and make them industrial schools for the children of whites and Indians alike.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, this seems to raise the whole question upon a simple resolution to get certain information concerning one school, which information, or most of which, we already have.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. A good deal of it we have not got.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman state the number of nonreservation schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. Twenty-seven are specifically appropriated for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman specify the reason why he has singled out this one school in calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for information as to the cost of these nonreservation schools thrughout the country?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because it would be very hard and it would require a good deal of labor and time to get up the information desired of all the schools, but as to one school it would be much easier to get the information.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the purpose of the gentleman in seeking information is to prepare a bill seeking to discontinue the present Indian schools located not on reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and then to turn them over to the States and Territories in which they are situated and make them industrial schools for whites and Indians alike.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any instance in which that course has been adopted up to the present time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know of any instance of that kind, but I think it should be done. We have no instance in which a citizen of any State or Territory has been educated at the expense of the United States Government, except in Annapolis and West Point.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has always been the policy of the Government, however, to educate the Indians as wards of the nation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But they are no longer wards of the Nation. That is the point I make, that when their parents become citizens of the State where they live, the children are no longer wards of the Government, but become citizens of the State and Territory where the Indian lives, and we should take our hands from them and let them become part and parcel of the people of the entire State where they live, and let the State control them, and we should take them from under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior and let them become citizens in fact as well as in name.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the gentleman contends that all the pupils in these nonreservation schools are children of Indians who are now full-fledged citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what I am trying to find cut. That is the information I want. Some of them are and some not, and I can not state the number.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman surmise that the same condition prevails at other nonreservation schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does.

Mr. STAFFORD. What institutions?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Numerous institutions, all nonreservation schools where they send Indians from one part of the United States to another—for instance, Carlisle. In that school you will find Indians from every State and Territory having Indian reservations in its borders.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not that a typical institution, and should not the gentleman embody an amendment asking for information as to that school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This resolution is to get the general information in regard to one single school, and in a newly admitted State that had formerly been a Territory. I think that would be a fair illustration of the general policy of the Government relative to these schools.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Texas speaks of introducing a bill to abolish all nonreservation schools. I would like to ask what the purpose of his bill will be? Will it be to abolish them immediately or to abolish them as suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a few schools at a time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the nonreservation Indian schools should be transferred to the State or Territory where they are situated. I think it should be placed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to determine what schools are not needed for the education of the Indian children that are not citizens of the United States. Indians of full blood and others that are not citizens of the United States should be educated by this Government, and if there are any nonreservation schools where there is a majority of the students whose parents are citizens of the State, that school should be transferred to the State or Territory in which it is situated and become subject to the jurisdiction of that State and subject to its laws, just exactly as the mechanical and agricultural schools of the various States are now conducted and controlled.

Mr. CARTER. Has not the Secretary of the Interior that authority already without the introduction of a bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. I know of no such authority.

Mr. CARTER. Then, I will ask the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. No, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Interior has no such authority as the gentleman from Oklahoma inquires about. The Secretary of the Interior was authorized, or the commissioner, I do not remember which, in the last Indian appropriation bill to investigate as to what nonreservation schools could be with advantage to the service dispensed with and to make report to Congress in reference thereto, and the commissioner has made a report in reference to certain schools, particularly one or two schools in Colorado, one school in South Dakota, and I have forgotten where the other schools are, which he says can be dispensed with. He has specifically made a report in reference to one school in Colorado, which should be dispensed with and turned over to the State of Colorado under terms which provide that the State will continue to maintain this school as a school not merely for Indians, but for white children, and that at that school at all times Indian pupils shall be educated without any charge against the National Government.

Now, I did not understand when the gentleman advocated the passage of this resolution of inquiry that he intended it for the purpose which he now says, because had I so understood it I would have asked the gentleman at that time to make the resolution broader in some respects, and to have eliminated from it certain provisions in reference to information which any of us can get by a little research. Now, a major part of the information asked for by this resolution any of us can get who have the industry to plow into the reports and hunt it up. I supposed the gentleman wanted it in order to advise himself in specific details in reference to this special school that are now covered by reports as, for instance, which pupils are the children of Indians who have become citizens. That, for instance, we have no way of ascertaining, nor is it in all cases shown in any report we can get, although the Indian Office could show it, to what tribe a particular pupil belongs. That is not printed; it is a matter of detail that is not of consequence for general use. But a large part of the matter which is contained in this resolution can be obtained by any of us from the regular reports. Now, as an entering wedge for the passage of a bill doing away with all nonreservation schools, I am not in sympathy with the gentleman at all. I do not believe in striking down all nonreservation schools, but I am in sympathy with the general proposition of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to do away as rapidly as possible with most nonreservation schools, but I do think there are certain schools, for instance, to illustrate, that at Carlisle or Chilocco or Haskell, which should be maintained for a great many years yet to come for the education of certain pupils who show themselves especially apt along higher lines than the ordinary reservation schools educate them.

I do think we ought to maintain for some little time at least the manual training schools, and there is a manual training school as a part of the Haskell School and Hampton School where children are taught in the mechanical arts—girls and boys alike—such commonplace matters as how to laundry, how to make harness, how to shoe a horse, how to build a fence, and everything of that kind, and those divisions of those schools ought to continue, I think, for some little time. Of course that can not be taught by an ordinary day school on a reservation, and is not taught, but as for using this resolution as an entering wedge to do away entirely with the nonreservation schools I am not at all in sympathy with the gentleman's ultimate purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would you have any objection to have the matter referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as to which schools should be abandoned, for instance.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have already done that in the last bill. If I may refresh the gentleman's memory, it says:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain whether and upon what terms it may be possible to dispense with any nonsectarian Indian schools which in his judgment are no longer of value to the Indian Service, and to report the result of his investigation to the next session of Congress.

Now, he has already made that report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will note that does not provide anywhere that there shall be transferred to the State or Territory in which these Indians reside or provide any machinery whatever for taking care of these schools in the future. Those schools should be filled by both whites and Indians and the schools should progress right on where they have left off, and we should let the States and Territories take care of them and not the United States Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. This section in the last appropriation bill does not provide for making other than an investigation and report to Congress. It grants no authority to go as far as the gentleman suggests. What the gentleman suggests is, the moment the Indians become citizens by reason of accepting allotment the United States then withdraws the support for the continuance of their schools. Why, the gentleman knows, because we have been discussing it in the Indian Committee quite recently, we not only provide for the support of the Indian children after the parent becomes a citizen or has taken an allotment, but in the Indian bill for three or four years last past we provide especially for the education of thousands of white children in the Indian Territory, when there is no pretense that there is any Indian blood in them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is not the general policy, however, for the rest of the United States outside of the Indian Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; the general policy is to in no place foster ignorance, which is the mother of crime, but rather to aid the education of either Indians or whites in any way that we legally and constitutionally can. That is the general proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will ask the gentleman this question: Would he have any objection to the passage of this resolution for the purpose of getting the information?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to the passage of it at all, but I do object to the ultimate end that you are attempting to reach; and had I known that was the ultimate end I do not know that I should have so readily acquiesced in the passage of this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There are now between 20 and 30 of these nonreservation schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I did not quite catch what the gentleman said about the report under the provision of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said the commissioner had already made a report. It can be found in the document room. I said he had already negotiated with the state officers of Colorado for the disposal to that State of one or two of the school plants there under terms stated in his report, and I think I introduced a bill providing for the carrying out of that agreement.

Now, he also makes report as to one or two other Indian schools. I recollect one particularly in South Dakota. There are perhaps five or six altogether in his report.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to inquire was whether he had made a report on each of these nonreservation schools or simply reported as to a portion of them?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all; only as to a portion. The bill last year did not contemplate a report on all of them, but only on such as, in his judgment, could now be disposed of or dispensed with. That was the thought.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to be recognized, Mr. Speaker, if I may, in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. OLMSTED. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it is manifest from the very frank statement of the gentleman from Texas that the purpose of this resolution is one which does not appear upon its face. This is a simple resolution calling for certain information concerning the training school at Shawnee, Okla. He states that the object of this information is to obtain a foundation for a bill to remove all nonreservation schools, including, of course, the one at Carlisle, in my district—to remove them all onto the reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, how the determination of the sex of a teacher at Shawnee would affect the question of the removal or nonremoval of the school at Carlisle.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Carlisle is a thousand miles away from the Oklahoma reservations, and would it not cost the Government a great deal of money to transfer the students there?

Mr. OLMSTED. It costs less to educate them there than in other schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I suppose nearly all of them are citizens of some State other than Pennsylvania, are they not? And the railroad fare must be paid by the Government?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, why should not the State of Pennsylvania in connection with the United States run and control that school just as much as you do your agricultural and mechanical and other state schools? Have you not one of that kind in your State?

Mr. OLMSTED. We have all kinds of schools in Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not there at least one industrial school where the United States maintains an interest jointly with the State?

Mr. OLMSTED. I know of no such school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have one in our State, and there is one in Virginia of that kind. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania have any objection to his school at Carlisle being controlled the same as the white schools of his State and letting white scholars attend it also?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection to white children being educated there. However, there is hardly room for any. It is full now of Indian pupils. The State of Pennsylvania already attends to the education of all white children.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This idea would not injure Carlisle (the transfer of nonreservation schools to the State where they are situated), but would mix the white children of that State with the Indian students and educate them all together.

Mr. OLMSTED. Perhaps I do not understand the gentleman's idea, but he first stated that he proposed to remove all these Indian schools to the reservations.

That would not only injure the school at Carlisle, but other nonreservation schools. It would do away with them entirely.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All the Indians of full blood and subject to the laws of the United States and belonging to some tribe, I would have educated with the tribe on the reservation where they live; but where they are citizens of some State, I would have the State or Territory where they live educate them.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, that is a question that can be determined at any time by the House. We would not be assisted at all by this. We would not be assisted by any information called for by this resolution. It seeks to ascertain the names of the employees and the number and sex of the teachers of the Shawnee Training School and the cost of keeping the pupils. All that information any gentleman may get by referring to the printed report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It gives the number of pupils enrolled, the annual attendance, the amount appropriated, the cost of the buildings—gives everything asked for here except, perhaps, the sex of the teacher, which seems to be not highly important in the determination of this great question. I submit, basing my reasons partly upon the reasons so well stated by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that there is no necessity for the introduction or passage of this resolution. The information given the department under it would throw no new light on the subject, and could not possibly afford any basis for the removal of any other nonreservation school, and I feel very certain that the gentleman from Texas can obtain from the report published by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs all the information he desires as to this school. That report is exceedingly full and contains a vast amount of information as to all these schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 77, noes 7.

So the resolution was agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP TO PORTO RICANS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (when the Committee on Insular Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report. [After a pause.] The Chair has not read the bill, but is informed it incurs a charge against the Government. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and of course can not be called up on a call of the committees.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the Speaker the bill that I sent up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only bills that are on the House Calendar can be called up under the call of committees. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

MILITARY ORDERS AND DECREES RELATING TO PORTO RICO.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 303, reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs and on the House Calendar.

The resolution was read, as follows:

House resolution 303.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House of Representatives for its information the laws and ordinances of Porto Rico and the military orders and decrees affecting Porto Rico referred to in section 8 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, under the Foraker Act the military orders and decrees and the laws and the ordinances of Porto Rico are made part of the fundamental laws of Porto Rico. They are out of print, and the object of this resolution is to have the War Department transmit them here, so that a new edition can be printed for the convenience of the many that have to look them up.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. These military orders and decrees, if they transmit them here, will only make them public here. There will not be printed more than "the usual number." The War Department will not have a copy it can use; the governor of Porto Rico would have no copy. There would be no copies to send out; but the only copies printed in any case, if printed at all, would be the "usual number," which is one for each Member of the House. If the gentleman wants to have them, why does he not follow the usual course and introduce a resolution to have them printed?

Mr. PARSONS. We will take them this way first.

Mr. MANN. They have been here. They were sent to Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are now in force?

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any objection at all to having it. They have all been published in a volume. They are not the military orders and decrees now, but only those issued prior to the passage of the Foraker Act, as I understand it.

Mr. PARSONS. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I would like to see the gentleman accomplish his purpose, but I do not think he will by this resolution.

Mr. PARSONS. Well, let us have it our way this time, and then if we find that does not do we can try it yours. At the time they are transmitted here we can pass another resolution providing for their disposition in another manner. The department is entirely out of them, and has no copies except the copy the department keeps for its own use.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question about this matter. I would like to ask him why they want these copies.

Mr. PARSONS. Anyone who wants to know what the law of Porto Rico is upon any particular point in any particular case would have to have these orders and decrees before him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman many requests of that nature?

Mr. PARSONS. I have had a few requests, and know that they would be of service to the members of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. OLMSTED. To be used by members of that committee and Members of the House that wanted to pass upon any measure that came from that committee.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Insular Affairs certainly has copies of the original papers which are necessary for the consideration of matters coming before the Committee on Insular Affairs. I know if it were a matter which affected the committee of which I am a member we would not only have copies for the committee, but for each member of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many copies does the gentleman propose to have printed?

Mr. PARSONS. The "usual number."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman, What do we want with the military laws of Porto Rico if they have civil laws there?

Mr. PARSONS. Because, under the Foraker Act, the military orders and decrees were made a part of the fundamental law of the land, and we can not find out what the fundamental law of the land is on any particular point unless we know what those military orders and decrees were.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long have we had a civil government in Porto Rico?

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman knows as well as I—ever since 1899.

Mr. MANN. April 12, 1900.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the Committee on Insular Affairs wants the military laws, although we have a civil government down there.

Mr. PARSONS. We have all the laws of Porto Rico except these.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much will it cost to print these military laws?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee) there were—ayes 43, noes 44.

Mr. PARSONS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed Mr. PARSONS and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

The House again divided and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 47.

Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill (H. R. 393) providing that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States is improperly on the Union Calendar, and I move that it be transferred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to make the point of order that the bill (H. R. 393) is improperly on the Union Calendar and should be on the House Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and directs that the bill be transferred to the House Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call up the bill (H. R. 393).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up the following bill, which has just been transferred from the Union Calendar to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. How was it transferred?

The SPEAKER. It has just been transferred on a point of order. It was on the Union Calendar, and has just been transferred to the House Calendar, and the gentleman from Wisconsin now calls up the bill.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that he can not now call up the bill. I did not understand that it had been transferred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin made the point of order that the bill was improperly on the Union Calendar. On examining the bill it seems to the Speaker that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair has just ordered the bill to be transferred from the Union Calendar to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that it is not in order to transfer a bill from the Union Calendar to the House Calendar and then immediately take it up on the call of committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. MANN. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the rule and the practice is that it shall not be in order to call up a bill on the same day that the transfer is made, or until it has been printed upon the calendar on which it has been placed, the idea being that the House should have notice of the transfer by the actual transfer and its appearance upon the proper calendar.

Mr. MANN. And that has been the uniform practice, I think, so that the rights of the House may be protected.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made, and the Chair will sustain it, that it is not subject to the call until it is in fact printed upon its proper calendar, the object being that the House shall have notice.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to ask unanimous consent that it be called up now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was my first request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to may be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think we ought to have an opportunity of knowing that the bill is likely to be brought up? This is a very important proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I quote from the Republican platform of this year:

We believe that the native inhabitants of Porto Rico should be at once collectively made citizens of the United States, and that all others properly qualified under existing laws residing in said island should have the privilege of becoming naturalized.

You had the whole campaign in which to consider it. We have advocated it on the stump and we have promised the people that if we were given the opportunity we would pass a law to put that into effect. I do not know why there should be any necessity for delay.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have as much respect for the Republican platform as has the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.] I think the matter ought to be delayed for the present, and I object.

DENTAL SURGEONS FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DAWSON. For the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16620.

The SPEAKER. On the Union Calendar?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 16620, authorizing the appointment of dental surgeons in the navy.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint dental surgeons to serve the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, not to exceed 30 in all. Said dental surgeons shall be attached to the Medical Department of the Navy; shall have the rank and compensation of acting assistant surgeons in the navy; shall be graduates of standard dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry; within the age limits of 24 and 35 years; of good moral character and professional standing, and shall pass a physical and professional examination; and their appointments shall be for a term of years and revocable at the pleasure of the President: Provided, That the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, the terms of this bill fully explain its purpose and its scope. It simply provides for the appointment of 30 dental surgeons in the navy, with the rank and compensation of an acting assistant surgeon. I might say that the naval service is now without any dental corps such as the army has, and this bill simply seeks to provide a corps in the navy analagous and similar to the one which is now a part of the army organization.

By the terms of this bill these dentists are appointed for a period of years, for such period as the President of the United States may determine, and the appointments are revocable at his pleasure. The bill does not carry the right either of promotion or of age-retirement pay.

The subject of creating a dental corps in the navy is one that has been long and patiently considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and has several times been favorably reported to the House, both in appropriation bills and in independent measures. The department is very urgent in its recommendation of the need of such a corps in that service, and I believe it will appeal to the House that such a corps is an essential and a necessity in the naval service. This particular bill has the cordial indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy. In a letter to the chairman of the Naval Committee under date of March 3, 1908, the then Secretary of the Navy recommends the passage of this bill in the following words:

Attention is invited to the bill (H. R. 16620) authorizing the appointment of dental surgeons in the navy, the provisions of which are in line with the department's views on the subject.

For many years the Surgeon-General of the Navy, in his annual report, has pointed out the great need of such a corps in that service. It seems to me it would not be out of place to quote briefly from the report the Surgeon-General of the Navy made last year, in which he says:

Like the eyes, the teeth are coming properly to be regarded as intimately and widely associated with the various organs and functions of the body, and that defective teeth may be responsible for much ill health is recognized by all who keep in touch with the accumulating truths of medical science. The naval surgeon is alert to detect dental disorders early, lest an aggravation of them produce grave illness. He, however, has not that special knowledge required to fit him to cope with diseased teeth in a final manner. He can and often does put in temporary fillings and treats the medical and surgical complications incident to dental disorders and often extracts such teeth as are not worth preserving, but naval surgeons are not expected to deal with dental disorders in a radical manner. The practice of dentistry requires a special education and training.

The teeth and the mouth are indubitably important factors in the causation of certain diseases of bacterial origin. This is not a hypothetical conclusion, for it has been proven beyond doubt that not only are bacteria found in great numbers in uncared for and neglected mouths, but their disease-producing properties are greatly increased, particularly in and about decayed teeth. Much of the tonsilitis and pharyngitis in the navy can undoubtedly be traced to bad teeth, as can also deranged digestion and general physical deterioration. In this connection it is not improbable that the teeth are an important contributory factor in tuberculosis by producing a state of lessened resistance to the disease by the constant absorption of poisonous matter.

In thus indicating the prominent reasons for the navy's need of proper dental services, it may be added that a bad tooth may occasionally give rise to serious complications which may even endanger life.

Surg. W. H. Bell, writing from Camp Elliott, on the Isthmus of Panama, says:

"During February (1905) a problem presented which gave us considerable worry, as there appeared no immediate solution. It concerned some very necessary dental work, which 35 or 40 of the command required to have done. Quarantine was then in force against Panama on account of yellow fever, and that fact, therefore, excluded us from the possibility of sending our men there for dental services, and as there was no dentist in Colon or anywhere else along the line the problem became a difficult one. We tried in vain to persuade one or the other of the American dentists on the Isthmus to come to camp with his outfit, and the only other resort was a native dentist, whose work, as far as it came under our observation, was so inferior that we hesitated to employ his services, but even he finally would not come. It was an experience which forcibly indicated the need of dental surgeons in the service. The end of the whole matter was the detachment of most of the men without having received any but palliative treatment and their transfer to Santo Domingo, where their chance for needed attention was, if possible, worse."

This quotation is only one of many similar reports from the various naval stations and ships, and with reference to our extensive service in equatorial latitudes it is to be pointed out that teeth deteriorate with particular rapidity in the Tropics. The importance of having skilled dentistry within the reach of those on duty in the outlying and isolated stations is evident, and at the large stations, where recruits are assembled and apprentices are trained, the value of the service of such professional attention is of no less moment.

Dental surgeons are needed in the navy quite as much as, if not more than, in the army, which service enjoys free treatment by dentists employed in accordance with law, and it seems an unjust discrimination against the enlisted men of the navy not to provide for similar dental work, especially in view of the universally recognized economic importance of sound teeth in military service.

A similar bill was favorably reported to the House in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS], who was formerly a member of the Naval Committee (H. Rept. No. 2181), and I desire to insert this report in the RECORD:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13851) authorizing the appointment of dental surgeons in the navy, report the same without amendment and recommend its passage.

A bill substantially the same as this was recommended by the Navy Department in the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 2, 1904.

SIR: Referring to the department's letters of May 29, 1902, January 26 and February 8, 1904, reporting upon bills for the employment of dental surgeons in the navy, and recommending the enactment of a measure authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to employ, under contract, not more than 15 such surgeons, I have the honor to state that after further consideration of the matter the department withdraws its previous recommendations in the premises and recommends instead the passage of the measure of which a draft is inclosed. The main points of difference between the bill heretofore suggested and that now proposed are that the latter authorizes 30 instead of 15 dental surgeons and provides that they shall have the rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons instead of being employed under contract at not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

Acting assistant surgeons, of whom 25 were authorized by the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 380), to be appointed by the President for temporary service, have the rank of assistant surgeons and receive the pay provided for the latter by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, namely: During the first five years after date of appointment, when at sea, $1,700; on shore duty, $1,400; on leave or waiting orders, $1,000; after five years from such date, when at sea, $1,900; on shore duty, $1,600; on leave or waiting orders, $1,200.

Very respectfully, W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

At present there is no provision of law under which the department can employ dental surgeons except one for service at the Naval Academy.

Surgeon-General Rixey informs this committee that the dental operations performed by the hospital stewards "are limited to simple procedures and urgent cases," that "this arrangement is a makeshift unsatisfactory to the bureau," that "the necessity of the care of the teeth of the enlisted men existed and its importance to the health of the navy is appreciated," and therefore this makeshift was resorted to "until legislation could be obtained giving advantages to the enlisted men of the navy similar to those which the army has had for several years."

To show the estimate of the importance and value of the service rendered by the dentists in the United States Army the Surgeon-General submitted copies of reports of army officers, from which we quote the following extract from the report of the Surgeon-General of the United States Army:

The energies and resources of the Dental Corps have been taxed to their fullest extent in caring for those officers and enlisted men who have sought their services for the relief of suffering, and this has made it necessary in some instances for the dental surgeons to operate daily from 8 a. m. to 5 or 6 p. m. The great amount of service that has been rendered by the dental surgeons could not have been accomplished but for these long hours of work and the assistance accorded them through the extra details of members of the Hospital Corps.

The tabulation of diseases and injuries of the mouth and jaws, of the teeth and gums, and of operations and treatment which follow shows that a large part of the time and skill of the dental surgeons was expended in giving relief from the suffering caused by dental caries, pulpitis, pericementitis, alveolar abscess, pyorrhea alveolaris, and gingivitis. The comparatively large number of teeth extracted is due to the great prevalence of dental caries of a severe type among the enlisted men who are serving or have served in Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Philippines.

The services of the dental surgeons have been highly appreciated by the officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer armies, and have proved very satisfactory to the Medical Department, because they have been able to relieve a great amount of acute suffering and to conserve a large number of teeth and restore them to a healthy condition, thus almost immediately returning to duty many cases that were previously carried for several days upon the company's sick report. This has resulted in greatly reducing the loss of valuable time to the service.

[Extract from the Surgeon-General's indorsement of Senate bill 5420.]

The dental surgeons appointed in accordance with the act of February 2, 1901, are rendering excellent service, and their services are highly appreciated by the officers and enlisted men of the army, especially in the Philippines and at the large military posts in the United States. A larger number could be utilized to good advantage, and the permanent retention of dental surgeons as part of the military establishment will, in my opinion, be in interest of the service.

[Extract from the report of General Grant, Department of Texas.]

DENTAL SURGEONS.

* * * * * * *

In my opinion, after careful investigation, the principal needs of the service, with respect to dental surgeons, are: First, more dental surgeons; second, a suitable operating room at each post; third, some positive and practicable methods compelling enlisted men to give proper attention to personal care of the teeth. I believe that there should be three dental surgeons assigned to this department, if possible, but not less than two under any circumstances. It is well known that the Philippine climate has a deleterious effect upon teeth, and every regiment, before being sent to the Philippines, should have careful attention given to dental requirements, while those regiments returning should be no less carefully attended to in this regard.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH U. S. INFANTRY,
Malate Barracks, Manila, P. I., May 20, 1904.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.
(Through military channels.)

SIR: I have the honor to invite attention to the importance of dentists in the army, especially at remote stations, in order that officers and enlisted men may have proper treatment.

While in command at Camp Marahui, Mindanao, certain officers, including myself, and a number of enlisted men suffered very much from the want of such service. Later, however, a dentist was provided, and great relief and benefit were realized.

There are times when the services of a dentist are as necessary as that of an army surgeon. From my experience in the service, including all parts of the United States and dependencies, I can testify to the importance of this branch of the service and to much suffering from the want of it.

It would, perhaps, be desirable to have dental surgeons assigned to certain regiments in the same way as chaplains. * * *

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARION P. MAUS,
Colonel Twentieth U. S. Infantry, Commanding.

There exists in the navy as much, if not more, urgent need of the service of dental surgeons than exists in the army, and quite as potent reasons, both humane and economic, for supplying the need. First, because of the early age at which a large percentage enter the naval service; second, because of the longer periods those at sea are inaccessible to competent dentists.

The apprentice boys in training schools and on ships, who February 1, 1904, numbered 4,519, are taken in the service when the care of the dental surgeon is necessary to protect them from the effects of dental disorders, which either immediately or later, in the absence of such care, affect for life their general health, comfort, longevity, and efficiency.

The Government assumes, in a sense, the guardianship of these boys when it receives them for life service in the navy, therefore for humane reasons nothing so vitally affecting their health and comfort should be neglected.

The attention of this committee was called to charts made by a doctor of medicine and dental surgery, employed as a hospital steward in the naval service, which show the condition of the mouths and teeth of 50 boys now, or recently, in training at the naval training station at Newport. One apprentice, but 16 years of age, had lost every one of the teeth from his upper jaw; another, aged 18 years, exhibited cavities in his 14 upper teeth; another, aged 16 years, had lost practically all of his molar teeth, and the few remaining teeth were imperfect; another, aged 17 years, had lost 7 teeth; and another, aged 18 years, had lost 7 molar teeth. Several others of the 50 cases from 16 to 18 years of age had lost from 3 to 6 teeth. It was said of these cases, in general, that they presented either ordinary cavities of decay; dead teeth; inflamed gums; chronic abscesses discharging pus in the mouth; pus-producing diseases of the teeth, gums, and underlying bone, or germ-laden foreign matter in contact with the gums and teeth. Such conditions cause gastric and intestinal disorders, impair vitality, and make one more susceptible to infectious diseases. Experts in dentistry inform us that, under present conditions, a large percentage of the cases exhibited from this one station must inevitably lose their teeth at an early age, which may render them pensionable under existing law.

There are no available statistics showing the conditions throughout the navy, but the general condition is probably well illustrated by the reports from two vessels, covering in each instance a period of one year, which, summarized, are as follows:

[From the U. S. receiving ship Wabash.]

The hospital steward detailed to dental service:

Restored by filling, crowning, etc	teeth	990
Treatment for various diseases	do	502
Extracted	do	92
Simple, chronic, and ulcerated conditions of gums treated	cases	227
Diseased nerves of teeth treated	do	165
Dead teeth treated and filled	do	110

[United States hospital ship.]

* * * I was employed for twelve months by special agreement with the Navy Department to service as a dental surgeon for the officers and enlisted men of the U. S. S. Yosemite, and during that time more than 75 per cent of the officers and enlisted men required and received dental service at my hands. Many of the cases were of a more or less serious character, and not a few of them had resulted from incompetent dental service rendered by men who were not educated to dentistry. No class of men are so helplessly in need of skilled dentistry as the men of the United States Navy. I did dental work both while the ship was at anchor in the harbor and while at sea.

ARTHUR R. BENNETT, D. D. S.

As dental conditions in the navy probably differ from those in the army only by reason of the earlier age at enlistment and the longer period of service in the former, we quote from three physicians experienced in army medical service as follows:

[Thomas S. Latimer, M. D.]

There can be no doubt that many soldiers were as effectually disabled by toothache, facial neuralgia, and other ailments, oral and gastric, due to lack of proper treatment, as from any other form of sickness or from gunshot wounds.

Precisely as the exhaustion, exposure, and unsuitability of food incident to an active campaign is the need of good masticatory organs. These being neglected or improperly treated, scurvy, dyspepsia, dysentery, and diarrhea are prone to ensue.

Nor is there any disability from any injury or sickness, even where not directly connected with imperfect mastication, that is not more protracted when mouth complications exist.

I need scarcely say that no ailments occasion greater suffering than toothache and neuralgia arising from decayed teeth. Nor are any more susceptible of prompt and complete relief under proper management. I may add that the regimental surgeon is incompetent to render the service required.

[Thomas Opie, M. D.]

That the health, strength, longevity, and courage of the soldier depend in large measure upon his powers of mastication can not be questioned. The dental specialist is best equipped for dealing with these lesions of the teeth, and surely the man who fights his country's battles has the right to claim the comfort and health which accrues from their being in perfect order.

[W. O. Owens, M. D.]

For seven years I have been giving especial attention to the diseases of the mouth and teeth because of their influence on the general health. During the time in which I was in charge of Corregidor hospital about 300 soldiers, more or less disabled by dental disorders, were under treatment. I recall one case in particular, a diarrheal trouble of several months' standing, which resisted treatment until placed under the care of a dentist, whose treatment, directed to the mouth alone, effected a cure and the restoration of the soldier to active duty in two weeks. There were 15 or 20 similar cases, known as pyorrhea of the sockets of the teeth, with pus bathing the teeth, mixing with food, and entering therewith the alimentary tract. Neglected, such cases cause a pensionable disability.

When men are kept at sea continuously for a considerable time or located at remote stations where dental surgeons are inaccessible, it seems to us an inexcusable hardship, and the neglect of proper treatment for the teeth may ultimately result in great expense through pensions, besides the inhumanity and suffering which necessarily occurs in the absence of prompt and scientific treatment of the teeth when needed. The charts or diagrams of some 50 or more particular cases represented to this committee from a single station at Newport, R. I., is ample proof of conditions which ought not to exist.

We therefore recommend that House bill 13851 be enacted.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the need of this corps is so self-evident, the navy now being utterly without service of this character, that unless some gentleman desires to ask some question in regard to the bill I will yield the floor and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLESPIE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DAWSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GILLESPIE. What is the maximum age limit for these dentists? I understood the reading of the bill to be 35 years.

Mr. DAWSON. The age limit is 24 to 35 years.

Mr. GILLESPIE. What is the necessity of putting that limit so low as 35 years?

Mr. DAWSON. This is a service where the members of it may be sent to sea, and we should have comparatively young men for the service.

Mr. GILLESPIE. I want to express my protest against the Oslerism contained in the bill, that a man over 35 years of age, although he possesses all the qualifications, mental and physical, and stands the examination, yet, because he is over 35 years of age, he shall be turned down.

Mr. DAWSON. That is simply the entrance qualification, the gentleman should understand.

It is not necessary for a man to get out of the service when he reaches the age of 35. That is simply the age limit at entering.

Mr. GILLESPIE. That is what I am speaking of. I do not believe the entrance bars ought to be put up against him simply because he is over 35 years of age.

Mr. DAWSON. I will state to the gentleman that, in my opinion, a dentist who has passed the age of 35 years and who is not receiving an income above that provided in this bill is not the kind of a dentist that we want in the navy.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, may I ask the gentleman if he thinks any dentist not receiving that income is qualified?

Mr. DAWSON. Not necessarily.

Mr. OLMSTED. In the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], I would like to inquire further whether these dentists are to be appointed after competitive examination, or what examination they will undergo?

Mr. DAWSON. By the terms of the bill it is provided that they shall be graduates of standard dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry, of good moral character and professional standing, and shall pass a professional examination.

Mr. OLMSTED. An examination by whom—the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. DAWSON. No; an examination which is prescribed by the Medical Department of the navy.

Mr. OLMSTED. A young man of 24 would not be very greatly trained.

Mr. DAWSON. No; but the gentleman will recognize that some age limit must be fixed.

Mr. OLMSTED. I agree that the maximum ought to be raised a little above 35 or else the aching teeth of the navy may find themselves in worse condition after this treatment proposed than they are now.

Mr. DAWSON. I think not, after these dentists have passed the examination which the Surgeon-General of the Navy will prescribe for entrance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I want to know why the word "acting," in line 8, is used—acting assistant surgeons? What is the significance of that in military law and military society, and so forth? Are these dental surgeons to be more or less ostracized in military and naval society, on the ships and on the land and otherwise, because they are "acting" surgeons?

Mr. DAWSON. Our committee has not endeavored to deal with the social phase of these dentists——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know what the committee means.

Mr. DAWSON. Nor the social status of them. That is a rank in the navy—acting assistant surgeon and assistant surgeon. The rank carries the pay.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But I am afraid it does not carry much of anything else that is social. I fear this and I want to know exactly what we are doing before we do it. I was working for dental surgeons in the army and navy probably before the gentleman came to Congress, and I am glad to know that he has brought a bill in on this subject. I really have heard, and hence I am inquiring, that an "acting" surgeon in the army is not treated with that social deference that the gentleman who is "acting" is entitled to receive, and I want to know what the gentleman knows about that, and I want to know the significance of the term "acting" as here used.

Mr. DAWSON. Under this bill these dentists would be on the same footing as the acting assistant surgeons of the navy now and in other branches of the Medical Corps. It did not seem to our committee to be important to the seaman who had an aching tooth as to what the social status of the dentist might be.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and he might go and pull all the teeth out of a man's head and save his life, and yet go to a military or navy entertainment that night, and because he did not have epaulettes along his horse's mane he is ostracized. [Laughter.] He is "looked down on." I want you to make a law here, and I want him, if he is a dental surgeon, and a gentleman also, to have a status that will give him that to which he is entitled to have in military and civil life.

Mr. MANN. Plenty of gilt.

Mr. DAWSON. I am sure my friend from Tennessee is a higher authority on social matters than I am.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I am an authority on common sense and justice on land and sea both. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWSON. I appreciate that also, and I will say to my friend from Tennessee that these dentists would have the same status and the same amount of gold braid, I assume, that any other acting assistant surgeon in the navy would have. I am sure it is not the desire of the gentleman from Tennessee to place these dental surgeons above the other acting assistant surgeons in the navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all; but a little prefix to a name goes a long way sometimes, and a little suffix, too, I regret to say.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me in order that I may have the gentleman from Tennessee answer a question?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It has been suggested to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES], whether the gentleman really believes that any dentist who would pull all the teeth out of a man's head at one time is entitled to any courtesies at any time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do; and I have seen men's lives saved, and I have seen men with no teeth who were as much of a gentleman as is my distinguished and delightful friend from Illinois. What objection would the gentleman from Iowa have to striking out the word "four," in line 10, and instead of having the minimum age limit 24, making it 20, because I know, and the gentleman knows, that we have many excellent dentists graduated in this country at the age of 20. I knew splendid dentists at the age of 18, who had not graduated, but who have since become famous in their profession. I really fear the minimum at 24 is too high. Let us say 20.

Why, we graduate a multitude of magnificent dentists in the city of Nashville, at the Vanderbilt and Nashville universities, and doubtless in your State, who are as capable at 20 years as at 24, because they are capable to start with, and they have had all this cultivation for three years at those great schools. When I attended a medical college and graduated, I only attended it for two years, and I think I am somewhat an authority on the subject.

Mr. BATES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he regards a man as a capable dentist to take care of the teeth of the navy of the United States who knows nothing but merely the narrow confines of dental surgery?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A man can not graduate in dentistry if he does not know all about a man's mouth and head.

Mr. BATES. He should know the anatomy of the whole body.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And, as a rule, he does.

Mr. BATES. He should know the nerves of both the head and the whole body. He should have, in other words, a thorough medical education before——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say that in the dental colleges, certainly in my section, when a man graduates in dentistry he graduates with the knowledge of nerves and the physiology of the whole human body and can, more or less, treat a man for general ailments. But I am not talking about that plan. I am talking about dentists graduated at a dental course——

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman gets through asking the question I will be very glad to answer it. I fear if we lower the age limit we could not be able to comply with the terms of the bill, which states they—

Shall be graduates of standard dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are trained before graduating.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not believe the gentleman can assume a boy of 20 years is trained——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the gentleman consider himself a boy at 20 when he was at college?

Mr. MANN. He did not then, but he does now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; the gentleman thought himself a man.

Mr. DAWSON. The average boy does not consider he is a man until he is 21.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He considers himself a man long before he comes to Congress.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Sometimes a man is highly entertained when he thinks to himself. Josh Billings, when asked why he talked to himself, said——

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We got into a very delightful colloquy, and I was going to tell what Josh Billings said. Josh Billings was asked why he talked to himself, and he said he did so for two good reasons: One was because he liked to hear a smart man talk and the other was because he liked to talk to a smart man. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I want——

Mr. DAWSON. It would be a great thing if Josh Billings's example was emulated in this House a little more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the gentleman's "temporary fillings."

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest doubt in the world but that this bill is a step in the right direction, and I shall vote for it even if not amended. For about ten years many of the dental colleges and dental associations throughout the United States have been trying to get this kind or some kind of legislation enacted, whereby dentists could be furnished the army and also the navy. Now, I will tell you something that I happen to almost know. Dr. J. Y. Crawford, of Nashville, Tenn., was the first man who mentioned the matter to me, just before or during the Spanish war. He is a distinguished dental surgeon of Nashville, Tenn. He has been three times elected president of the dental association, and they suspended its rules to elect him the third time. He is now one of the great dentists of the country and is an authority on that subject. While our troops were down at Chickamauga Park during the Spanish war he happened to go up to the camp; and just looking around, looking after the sick soldiers, as a doctor would do or any good citizen would do, what did he find? He found three or four soldiers who were in a collapsed condition suffering from their diseased teeth. He examined their teeth for them as a matter of charity and goodness and waited on them and did not charge them a cent. That brought the subject sharply to his attention, and he then brought it sharply to my attention, and I at once set to work in Congress to get some dental legislation for the army and possibly the navy. Subsequently, as you all know, dental legislation was adopted for the army, and you remember, I believe, we passed a bill introduced by the lamented Mr. Otey, a former Member of Congress, now deceased. The law has worked well. Now, I do not see why the navy should not have official dentists. As to whether it is the right kind of a bill or not, we are little prepared to say. We have never heard it discussed before or read it before. We did not know it was to come up. But rather than not have any bill, I am going to vote for it. But I believe it should be amended. I do not like the Oslerized proposition of 35 years. There are soldiers in the army to-day in the Philippines that are far more than 35 years.

Mr. DAWSON. Were they 35 years at the time of their entrance?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There were some who went from Tennessee that fought in the Confederate army. I know one citizen of Tennessee to-day, the Hon. W. J. Whitthorne, a man who is as brave as Julius Cæsar, who went almost at the head of his regiment. He returned with his regiment, emaciated, as others were, but he lives to honor his State and his name. His brother, W. C. Whitthorne, made such a good chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs at one time that he was afterwards called "Admiral Whitthorne." The late President McKinley on a number of occasions spoke of this regiment in the highest terms. When this regiment started home, and was out on the sea, they heard the cannon of the enemy. The ship was turned around and they went back and fought for the flag, and a lot of their graves are to-day in the Philippine Islands. That is the kind of stuff we send from Tennessee, to fight for the flag.

Talk about 35 years of age. Why, if I were a dentist they would shut me out, and shut out the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] in a few years. It would shut out a third of this House and nearly all of the Senate. Why, a dentist does not have to go out and expose himself to the weather. He is in a tent or in a house. He is well protected and should be. His instruments have to be. He has to have all sorts of anodynes and all sorts of delicate instruments with which to treat the nerves of the mouth with the tenderest care, as we all know. I do think the 35-year limit is too narrow, and I would like to know if there is any way to amend this bill, Mr. Chairman. Can I offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read under the five-minute rule for amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. The time for amendment will come later.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for this indulgence. I happen to know something about this subject, as you see, and something about the legislation we have had, and have made some practical observations that I hope will help pass the bill, amended or not amended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] to say that they had no notice that such a bill would come up, did not know such a bill was pending, and hence was not prepared upon the bill.

There is no one in the House probably who is more active in watching legislation than the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman said we did not have notice of the bill, thereby including other Members than himself. This bill was reported into the House on March 13 last. I read the bill long ago. I am rather surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee had not noticed the bill. It was introduced on February 6 last. Prior to this bill there was a bill reported from this committee on March 3, 1905, and another bill on March 9, 1906, and before that time there had been a bill reported in 1904, and before that time in 1901. And my distinguished friend from Tennessee never caught on to the fact that these bills were pending in the House so that he might be prepared when it did come up.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Were any of those bills debated or considered in the House?

Mr. MANN. Well, does the gentleman from Tennessee wait until a bill has been discussed in the House before he gets any information in regard to it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do we know beforehand? Did you know beforehand?

Mr. MANN. Certainly I knew beforehand. I knew this bill might come up. I have had the bill on my desk, marked as to what ought to be done with it. The gentleman from Tennessee ought to be equally vigilant.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But did the gentleman have anybody to help him look up these bills, and give him the information?

Mr. MANN. I have had no one to help me do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I believe the gentleman from Illinois is the most industrious man in Congress. I say it seriously; I want to pay him that compliment.

Mr. MANN. I am not as industrious as the gentleman from Tennessee. But we have, neither one of us, any right to complain that we are not familiar with the provisions of the bill so as to be prepared to offer an amendment if we wish to. This bill has been pushed for years, and it had been up for years before it was pushed.

Mr. OLMSTED. It has been on the Union Calendar for some time.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman for some assurance with reference to the future of these dental surgeons, if we may have them. The gentleman from Tennessee believes they ought to be, in the first place, put upon the same plane as other naval officers so far as the social side of life is concerned. That may be true; I doubt not that they will be before very long. But when we pass a bill of this kind—and I am in favor of passing this bill as it stands, without amendment—I would like to know what it will lead to, if I can find out, in the future. The bill provides for the appointment of not to exceed 30 dental surgeons, to have the rank and compensation of acting assistant surgeons in the navy. First, may I ask the gentleman from Iowa, What is the compensation of assistant surgeons of the navy?

Mr. DAWSON. I quote from a recent statement of the Secretary of the Navy. During the first five years after date of appointment an acting assistant surgeon, on leave or waiting orders receives $1,000 a year; on shore duty, $1,400 a year, and on sea duty, $1,700 a year.

Mr. MANN. And that increases 10 per cent every five years, I think.

Mr. DAWSON. They get the benefit of longevity.

Mr. OLMSTED. And they will finally be put on the retired list at three-fourths or full pay.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said no, and I assume he is correct upon reading the bill; and yet there may be some doubt. "Shall have the rank and compensation of acting assistant surgeons in the navy." If the President should determine to appoint these dental surgeons for a term of forty or fifty years, which is very likely, when they have served that time they would be entitled to go on the retired list. I do not know that I have any objection to it. One thing is very certain in my mind; that long before that term will have expired, long before any of these dental surgeons would be allowed to go upon the retired list, we will be called upon to pass, and will have passed, a law conferring upon them precisely the same privileges, the same rank, the same power, the same retirement, that we have conferred upon surgeons of the navy. I take it that while this bill, in the first place, does not seek to do all this, it is a mere entering wedge in that respect.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is just what I am trying to get you to do.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to say that the intent and purpose of the committee was to guard against the very thing which the gentleman speaks of, and he will observe in line 13 of the bill that these appointments are revocable at the pleasure of the President as the years go on.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that is the case with the superannuated clerks in Washington. The gentleman and I are upon the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, considering pensions for superannuated clerks. Their appointments are revocable. There is not one of them that may not be discharged to-morrow by the President; but will he discharge them? No. Would the gentleman discharge them if he were President? No. Would I discharge them? No.

Mr. DAWSON. And would any President of the United States appoint them for forty years? No.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not so sure about that. I should say that there would be the same reason for making life appointments for dental surgeons in the navy as there would be for making life appointments for surgeons in the navy.

Mr. BATES. Are those gentlemen, of whom the gentleman from Illinois complains, bettering their condition as time goes on? Are these men appointed for a term of years, as it is contemplated that these acting assistant surgeons shall be appointed?

Mr. MANN. They are not.

Mr. BATES. I think that makes the distinction very clear, that if these men at the end of a term of ten or fifteen or twenty years are inefficient, they will be dropped and new men appointed.

Mr. MANN. Then, I call the attention of the gentleman to this proposition, suggested by his inquiry: Suppose the President appoints these naval surgeons for a period of ten years?

Mr. DAWSON. I should think the appointive term would probably be more likely to be four years than any other.

Mr. MANN. Assume it to be four years, then. I will take the gentleman's statement. If one of them is over 35 years old at the end of the four years, what shall be done with him? Shall he be hoisted out of the navy?

Mr. DAWSON. The thirty-five years limit is at the beginning; simply the entrance limit.

Mr. BATES. That is for his original appointment.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The first appointment and the second appointment under this bill are on exactly the same terms. The first time a man is appointed postmaster he gets a commission and his term is four years. When his term expires, if he is reappointed, that is a new appointment ab initio.

Mr. OLMSTED. Under this bill if a man is over 35 he can not be appointed again.

Mr. MANN. It is ab initio, a new appointment entirely, and I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is nothing in the bill which authorizes the President to reappoint the same person at the end of his first term if he is over 35 years of age, and the only way in which the President can avoid that is to make a long-term appointment. I shall not criticise him if he does that. I think if you have a good man as a dental surgeon in the navy, you had better keep him; but, plainly, in the end he will ask to be put upon the retired list, and perhaps ought to be.

Mr. DAWSON. The Dental Corps in the Army of the United States was established some years ago. They have no retirement provision in that corps, and it was sought in this bill to place the naval corps upon the same footing.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's committee is right about that at this time, and I would feel better if I could have the assurance of the committee that they were not going to bring in a bill changing it.

Mr. DAWSON. It was pointed out here, I think on yesterday, very distinctly and plainly by the gentleman from Illinois that the present Congress can not bind any future Congress.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. DAWSON. And of course he will appreciate the fact that one humble member of the Naval Committee could not bind the action of the future Naval Committees of this House.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but the gentleman can make a statement for himself. I have observed that.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to offer some amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint dental surgeons to serve the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, not to exceed 30 in all. Said dental surgeons shall be attached to the Medical Department of the Navy; shall have the rank and compensation of acting assistant surgeons in the navy; shall be graduates of standard dental colleges, trained in the several branches of dentistry; within the age limits of 24 and 35 years; of good moral character and professional standing; and shall pass a physical and professional examination; and their appointment shall be for a term of years and revocable at the pleasure of the President: Provided, That the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on line 10, to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "one," so that the age limit shall be 21 instead of 24 years for entrance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, page 1, strike out "four" and insert "one."

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that amendment. I would not want a surgeon of 21 taking care of my teeth if they were in bad shape, and I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee would. I do not think we ought to put on board ship, away from where he can have consultation, away from where he can get in touch with another surgeon, a mere tyro, who can know but very little about the practical side of the work in which he is engaged. Twenty-four years is a young enough age limit for a man who may be put aboard ship in the South Sea or some other place a long way from home to take care of the teeth of our sailors.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I fully appreciate what my friend says, but I wish to say to him that a young man 18 or 19 years old, not yet a voter, was the first man who ever practiced dentistry on me. In a few years he worked himself through college and graduated at the head of his class and was the medal man, and is now one of the finest dentists in the country.

Mr. MANN. He may be an exception; but we will not get exceptions in the navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mention this specific instance to show that the argument is not a sound one that a man has got to be 24 years old before he can become a dentist.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Tennessee gives an exceptional case and not an average case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is an actual case; and I want to say that the dental curriculum requires a man to give three years and the medical profession has raised it to four years.

Mr. DAWSON. The last statement of the gentleman from Tennessee only emphasizes the fact that the age limit ought not to be reduced below 24 years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose he graduates at 21?

Mr. MANN. Then let him practice a little while.

Mr. DAWSON. This question of age limit was carefully considered by the committee. The minimum was placed as low as we thought it was safe to place it, and the maximum as high as the committee thought it ought to be placed, taking into account the nature of the service. It is not a service alone at a navy-yard or a shore station. It may be a service in the Tropics or points far distant. The committee considered that phase very carefully and determined upon the ages of 24 and 35, and I believe the committee ought to be sustained.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail. He says, "Suppose the young man graduates at the age of 21." He ought not to graduate in a training school at the age of 21. If he is to be a well-rounded and well-educated man he ought to have a general education which shall precede the specific education. I believe there is a great deal of truth in the saying that the difference between a training school, like a law school or a dental school or a medical school, and that of general culture in the colleges is the difference that in the one a man is taught to earn his living and in the other he is taught how to live. Both of these teachings ought to be required in a case of this kind, where the young man is to be isolated from his home influences and go into the navy of the United States. He ought to be a well-rounded man, Mr. Chairman, and have some general culture and training such as the American colleges can give. He ought to know something more than simply where the molars are situated and where the specific nerves of the teeth should have treatment. He ought to have general education and then have this dental training; and no man, unless he is an exception to the general rule, can accomplish that before he reaches the age of 23 or 24. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, he ought to have a little practice, to begin with. He ought to have some general experience or hospital training before he launches out into this career. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be voted down.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman has just said, I want to say that from the time a dental student enters the dental college he is doing practical work in dentistry. He is doing it day in and day out, and before he graduates he has to stand an examination in practical dentistry. He is not allowed to graduate until he takes that examination. He is not allowed simply to read books and quote what this great doctor has done or what the other great doctor has done and simply to know a little about anatomy; he is required to work day in and day out and graduate in the practical work of dentistry. He can not make a good dentist unless he is a good anatomist, and vice versa.

They do not graduate dentists now and give them a commission to go out and invade people's mouths, who are not practical surgeons when they go out. It is not like the old story you have heard about the dentist who went out with his hammer and pair of tongs as long as your arm, but now he must be a scientific surgeon when he leaves the great dental colleges of this country, even if he graduates at 16. Why, Mr. Chairman, Story was on the bench when he was a younger man than is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a fairly good lawyer and of course he has quoted Story time and again.

Now, I say that the young man who has graduated at our great dental universities is a skilled surgeon when he graduates. He is skilled in the general knowledge of the dental business; he is skilled in the practical knowledge, and goes out into the world a full-fledged, scientific, and practical surgeon, capable of attending to anybody's needs, whether he is on land or on sea.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I happen to know something about this. I live, unlike the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in a city that is studded with colleges, male and female, black and white. [Laughter.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if he lives in a city, as I do, where there is a theological seminary——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do; and they do us more good, I have no doubt, than they do the people of the gentleman's city. [Laughter.]

Mr. BATES. And I want to ask him if he has four institutions of learning in his city as I have in mine? A college—Allegheny—where the late President McKinley was educated, and of which I have the honor of being a trustee; a college of music; and a business college?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I think there are five or six in mine, and more coming [laughter], and universities. You can hardly keep them out. I am satisfied that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would come down to Nashville he would want to stay there. I would introduce him to some of the greatest dentists in this country. I would introduce him to one of the greatest dentists this country has ever seen.

Mr. BATES. How old is he?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He is noted all over the country and is consulted by people from all over the country. He is Dr. J. Y. Crawford.

Mr. BATES. Is he not over 20 years of age?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, he is over 20 years of age; but he went to an ordinary dental college, and since that time has founded colleges.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman from Tennessee not admit that his distinguished friend was a better dentist at the age of 24 than he was at the age of 21? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know. He is good all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BATES. If he admits that, he gives away his amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He is good all the time. He is a natural-born dentist. [Laughter.] In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. SIMS] says that he was born and reared in his district, and that should be absolute proof of the truth of what I have said.

Mr. Chairman, concluding this matter, I really do think that we are shutting out a lot of splendid young surgeons who would be glad to come into the service and do good service, and that being the case I want to give everybody under proper limitations a good chance. I am against monopoly of all sorts, and I want, wherever I can, to give everybody a chance; not hope only, but a practical chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAWSON) there were—ayes 21, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, to strike out in the same line, including line 11, the words "thirty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee) there were—ayes 27, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I now renew my motion that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee arose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAPRON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16620) authorizing the appointment of dental surgeons in the navy, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAWSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

PROMOTION OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (when the Committee on Labor was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 19662) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace," approved March 2, 1907, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the trustees herein mentioned to invest and reinvest the principal of this foundation, to receive any additions which may come to it by gift, bequest, or devise, and to invest and reinvest the same; and to pay over the income from the foundation and its additions, or such part thereof as they may from time to time apportion, to a committee of 16 persons, to be known as the "industrial peace committee;" said committee to consist of the 7 trustees and 9 other persons to be selected by the trustees, 3 of whom shall serve as members of the committee for the period of one year, 3 as members for the period of two years, and 3 as members for the period of three years; 3 of the 9 members thus selected by the trustees to be representatives of labor, 3 to be representatives of capital, each chosen for distinguished services in the industrial world in promoting righteous industrial peace, and 3 members to represent the general public. Any vacancies which may occur in this committee shall be filled by the selection and appointment in the manner prescribed for the original appointment of the committee, and when the committee has first been fully selected and appointed each member thereafter appointed shall serve for the period of three years or for the unexpired portion of such term."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the said act be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the industrial peace committee herein constituted shall arrange for such meetings and conferences in the city of Washington, D. C., as it may deem advisable, of representatives of labor and capital for the purpose of discussing industrial problems with the view of arriving at a better understanding between employers and employees. It shall call such conferences in case of great industrial crises and take such other steps as in its discretion will promote the general purposes of the foundation, subject, however, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the trustees. The committee shall receive suggestions for the subjects to be discussed at the meetings and conferences, and be charged with the conduct of the proceedings at such meetings and conferences, and shall also arrange for the publication of the results of such meetings and conferences."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendments by which this bill seeks to amend an act passed in the last Congress is perhaps best explained in a letter which I have received from Hon. Oscar S. Straus, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and which I desire to have read from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 19, 1908.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At the last joint meeting of the trustees and the committee of the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace a resolution was adopted recommending that section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907, be so amended as to effect a change in the membership of the Industrial Peace Committee, and I was instructed to bring the matter to the attention of Congress, with the view of securing the amendment of the act in question.

Knowing your personal interest in the beneficent purpose contemplated by Congress in making provision for the use of the Nobel prize, I have the honor to submit herewith a draft of the proposed amendment to section 2, with the request that should it meet with your approval you introduce the same in the House and use your good offices in securing its enactment.

The amendment provides that the Industrial Peace Committee shall consist of 16 members instead of 9 as now provided, and shall include the 7 trustees created by the act. It is believed that the cooperation of the trustees with the committee appointed by them will place a practical responsibility upon the trustees commensurate with the importance of the trust, and that the unification of the two bodies will best subserve the interests involved.

Upon my own responsibility I have also drafted an amendment to section 3, which does away with the necessity of calling an annual conference of the representatives of capital and labor for the purpose of discussing industrial problems. I am convinced that a compulsory annual meeting between the representatives of capital and labor is not advisable, and that better results will be accomplished by leaving it within the discretion of the committee to call meetings when deemed necessary.

A draft of these proposed changes has been sent to Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, of the Senate, in order that consideration of the matter may be had by that body.

Very truly, yours,

OSCAR S. STRAUS, Secretary.

HON. RICHARD BARTHOLDT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, as appears from this letter, the amendments which are here proposed to the original act are merely technical in character. They provide that instead of two bodies which are to administer this fund only one body is to be created, consisting of 7 trustees, namely, the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, 1 person to represent capital, 1 person to represent labor, and 2 persons to represent the general public. Those 7 persons are the board of trustees. There are to be added to these 7 persons 9 citizens of the United States, 3 to represent capital, 3 to represent labor, and 3 to represent the general public. Under the terms of the original act the board of trustees had really no functions to perform excepting to turn over the money which is to be collected under this law to the committee of 9 as a working committee. The trustees and the committee of 9 held a meeting last spring, and upon due consideration of the whole subject they came to the conclusion that it would be more advantageous and secure a more efficient administration of the trust if the two bodies can be unified and placed upon the same footing, so that the fund is to be administered by a committee or a board of 16 persons. That is the first amendment.

The second amendment merely provides that the meetings which are to be held for the discussion of questions affecting labor and capital shall not be compulsory, but shall be held in the discretion of the board of trustees. The Committee on Labor has carefully considered these amendments and has reported this bill favorably to the House, and I ask its passage at this time. Unless some Member desires to ask any questions, I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell what, if anything——

Mr. BARTHODLT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What, if anything, has been done under the act which was passed in the last Congress?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The only thing, as I understand, Mr. Speaker, that has been done was a meeting of the gentlemen appointed by the President of the United States under this bill, namely, the seven trustees and the committee of nine. They held a meeting in this city in March last, and after carefully considering the whole subject came to the conclusion that it would be necessary to pass this amendment in order to more effectually carry out the purposes of the donor, the President of the United States.

Mr. MANN. The law has been in operation now nearly two years with a very impressive title, "An act to establish the foundation for the promotion of industrial peace." They have the money and the title. Have they done anything in two years' time toward accomplishing the purpose?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the total amount of money which was contained in the donation will go very far in the direction of establishing industrial peace in this country, but money is probably not the essential thing.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In a moment; I wish to answer this first. In fact, according to the terms of this bill, not the original fund but only the interest of the fund can be used for the purposes of this legislation. The idea was, of course, that American philanthropists might be induced to add to that nucleus of $40,000, which was created by the generous donation of the President, so that eventually a larger fund might be had for the noble purpose of promoting industrial peace.

Mr. MANN. I might say to the gentleman I am not asking for idle curiosity. Our committee had the Townsend bill pending in the House, which was discussed for a day in reference to the appointment of arbitration boards, and I asked because I thought the gentleman would be informed as to what really had been done. They have had the interest for some portion of time on this money. I understand the principal was $40,000. Now, what, if anything, has been done under the provisions of that act except meeting and saying they wished further legislation?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is about right. They could do nothing and could not properly organize until Congress could enact this additional legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the committee have a permanent organization, and does it attempt to collate data in relation to the industrial situation?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, nothing has yet been done in that direction, but it is undoubtedly proposed to do that very thing. In fact, if the expressed purposes of the gentlemen who are interested in this matter are to be carried out, this organization will in the course of time, probably, take the place of what is now called the "Civic Federation."

Mr. MADDEN. There is no power before the committee under the law to force any settlement of any industrial difficulty.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir; there is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the special function of the committee?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the discussions, which will be carried on under the provisions of this bill, will be more or less in the nature of academic discussions of questions of capital and labor.

Mr. MADDEN. Educational in their character.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Educational in their character; and if some great occasion might arise of great difficulties between those two powerful factors, why, probably, this organization might be called into action.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman consider this committee as being of as much importance in the settlement of industrial difficulties as any proposed committee of compulsory arbitration that might be created under the law?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, this board would surely not be as effective, because they have not the power to arbitrate.

Mr. MADDEN. Would anybody have the power, even though it might be delegated to them by law?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not think this Congress would have the jurisdiction to provide compulsory arbitration.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that they shall arrange for the publication of the results of the meetings and conferences. Is there anything in the former law requiring a report to Congress?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I think it might be well if the original act be read—it is short—for the information of the House, and I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and their successors in office, together with a representative of labor and a representative of capital and two persons to represent the general public, to be appointed by the President of the United States, are hereby created trustees of an establishment by the name of the "Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace," with authority to receive the Nobel peace prize awarded to the President and by him devoted to this foundation, and to administer it in accordance with the purposes herein defined. Any vacancies occurring in the number of trustees shall be filled in like manner by appointment by the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I believe that answers the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Who makes the appointments now?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The President makes the appointments.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. And the purpose of this act is to have seven trustees to make the appointments?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman will find an answer to his question in the first section of the original act, which says:

That the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and their successors in office, together with a representative of labor and a representative of capital and two persons to represent the general public, to be appointed by the President of the United States, are hereby created trustees—

No; section 2 is the proper section. I will read:

That it shall be the duty of the trustees herein mentioned to invest and reinvest the principal of this foundation, to receive any additions which may come to it by gift, bequest, or devise, and to invest and reinvest the same; and to pay over the income from the foundation and its additions, or such part thereof as they may from time to time apportion, to a committee of nine persons, to be known as "The Industrial Peace Committee," to be selected by the trustees, three members of which committee shall serve for the period of three years, three members for the period of two years, and three members for the period of three years; three members of this committee to be representatives of labor, three to be representatives of capital, each chosen for distinguished services in the industrial world in promoting righteous industrial peace, and three members to represent the general public.

So that the committee of nine is to be appointed by the trustees.

The SPEAKER. Is there an amendment?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no further amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. There was some opposition to this bill before the committee; rather serious opposition on the part of some members of the committee who are not present in the House at this time. The main objection seems to have been that it created a sort of a self-perpetuating body and that little could be expected as the outcome of this amendment. Under the language of the amendment the several trustees become members of the commission. Now their functions consist simply of their conduct as custodians of this fund, to invest and reinvest it and turn it over as it may be required to pay the expenses of the members of the commission. This amendment makes these seven trustees, together with nine other persons to be selected by the trustees, members of this commission. At the time the amendment was offered and supported in committee by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], who has called up this bill, this objection was made to it. I regarded it as a serious objection then, and some of my colleagues on the committee regarded it as a serious objection also. I think it is a departure from the main object of the bill, which is to have the gentlemen named as trustees responsible only for the funds so as to have two separate and distinct bodies, one body caring for the fund and the other body carrying on the functions of the commission. It is true that it is a harmless sort of proposition, and nothing seems to have been done under it since it came into existence, and there is not very much chance that anything much will be done under it. Nobody has yet seen fit to leave any great sums of money to the commission, but it seems to me that the original act was better than the act will be if this proposed amendment is adopted.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does it contemplate any ultimate charge on the Public Treasury?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; this amendment does not contemplate any ultimate charge on the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? The trustees, or a majority of them, or a portion of them, at least, are officials in Washington—the Chief Justice, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and perhaps some others. When I read this bill I took it that the real reason for the bill was because it was impossible to get a quorum here of the nine other persons selected by the trustees. Having some officials in Washington who are trustees would aid the commission in getting a quorum of the commission once in a while by getting the officials here in Washington and two or three from the outside. Is there anything else to it than that?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Well, I do not know. That reason is not set out in the letter of Secretary Straus, and has not been urged here.

Mr. MANN. That is a reason they could not very well give in public, I suppose. I happen to be one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and I am quite sure that half the time if there were no officials on the board they would have no quorum to transact business. It is easy for the officials to go to the meetings, but it is very difficult for people to come from abroad sometimes to attend a meeting. Very often they may want to transact some business.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The reason of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not seem to me to be an impelling one.

Mr. MANN. I only asked if that were not the reason. That is the only reason I can see for doing it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The House a little while ago voted down one of these arbitration propositions, and I find that both classes of supposed beneficiaries of these arbitration acts are against these so-called "benefits" that people are wishing to thrust upon them. Neither the manufacturers nor those engaged in manual labor have any desire to have these acts passed which provide machinery for arbitration of disputes. They can get together any time they want without any act of Congress and without any state laws.

I do not know of any state board of arbitration that has ever done any practical good to anybody except to themselves. We have had one in our State, recently abolished, which, for a good many years, performed the physical and manual labor of signing their salary vouchers and performed no other useful service. Now, if it is impossible to appoint a commission that will take sufficient interest in this matter to meet, why should we make it easy for the commission to meet? These six or seven trustees, in accordance with the views suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, would be sitting here all the time, out of touch with industrial conditions throughout the country. Such a commission would be considered to be in touch if appointed in accordance with the idea of the original act. They would be promulgating their views, and publishing them perhaps. But under the original bill and the original idea they were supposed to have absolutely nothing to do with the board except to administer the funds. Now it is proposed to make them a permanent existing quorum in the city of Washington.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I believe the gentleman is a member of the committee which reported this bill.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In the original organic act giving life to the measure were there any duties imposed upon those who were appointed on the board of trustees?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Not according to my understanding of the terms of the original act, which I do not happen to have by me. The duties of the trustees were limited to the administration of the funds. Now, this amendment contemplates making the trustees a part of the commission and having them appoint nine other members of the commission, so that they become at once a self-perpetuating body, over whom nobody has any control—a body that may become out of touch with the industrial conditions; and if the commission was made up of men appointed who live throughout all the country, nobody will attend except the trustees. These trustees are not selected for their personality. They obtain their positions as trustees by virtue of the offices for which they are selected—as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and so on. They were selected not because they were particularly fit men to discharge functions of this kind, but particularly and peculiarly fitted to administer a trust fund, which was altogether the purpose of the original law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman some few moments ago said there was very strenuous opposition to this amendment before the committee. Upon what was the opposition based?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The opposition of every representative of organized labor who has spoken to me on the subject was based on the ground that it was likely to cause the commission to be out of touch with industrial conditions. I will say, however, that they were not in favor of the original proposition as it remains if this amendment should be defeated. I will say that I simply rose to debate this amendment in order that I might have an opportunity to register my opposition to it and say to the House that some of my colleagues on the committee not here at this time also opposed this amendment at the time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take the floor; but the reason that the gentleman from New Jersey opposes the amendment seems to me is not a sufficient reason. The purpose of the bill is very plain to me. When the Nobel prize was awarded to the President, he donated that money to carry out the purpose of the law to which this bill is an amendment. Probably that law was not very carefully scrutinized in the House. I do not know how perfect it may have been, but it had one effect. It provided for the appointment by the trustees of nine members of the committee, scattered necessarily throughout the country. It is not easy to get these nine members here together. Of the nine members it takes five to make a quorum. I do not know what the usual practice has been, but if the usual practice was followed it would be very difficult to obtain a quorum of the committee here, unless there could be added to that committee some gentlemen living in Washington. That is easily done if half a dozen of the trustees who named the other nine members themselves constituted a part of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman fear that this self-perpetuating permanent body if assembled here in Washington all the time might become so industrious as to become engaged in undesired and undesirable interference in labor disputes?

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly impossible for this commission or committee to be assembled here all the time with the amount of money they now have or with the amount of money they will be likely to have for many years.

The reason I speak about this is because I happen to be one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. That Board of Regents is composed of the Chief Justice, the Vice-President, 3 Members of the House, 3 members of the Senate, 2 residents of the District of Columbia, and a number of other gentlemen scattered throughout the country. Whenever they have important matters to consider, the members throughout the country are notified and most of them attend; but very often it is impossible for some of them to be here, and it is quite often the case that a majority of the members scattered throughout the country away from Washington are unable to attend a meeting; and unless there were at the meeting members located in Washington, it would be very difficult to obtain a quorum for ordinary meetings of the board. The commission affected by this bill have no large sum of money on hand, and in my view are not likely to have any enormous sum of money.

Mr. WALDO. How much?

Mr. MANN. They have $40,000, of which they can use the interest. If they ever do obtain a large sum of money, it will be within the power of Congress to amend the law under which they act, and it seems to me it is perfectly proper to give them what they are asking for.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of committees.

The Committee on the Militia was called.

MILITIA IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 21926) for the organization of the militia in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. STEENERSON. The bill is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill (H. R. 21926) for the organization of the militia in the District of Columbia was read.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill, which you will observe is quite a long one, I will say that the Militia of the District of Columbia was organized under an act passed in 1889. As you will recall, Congress in 1903 passed the Dick law, which provides that before the militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia can share in the appropriations made by the Congress for the militia, they must conform in organization, armament, and discipline to the Regular Army within five years from the date of that act. Last year we extended the time two years, so that the time within which the militia of all the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia must conform in organization to the Regular Army expires next year. This makes it necessary to rewrite many of the sections of the organic act of the Militia of the District of Columbia. The first nine sections did not require any change, but most of the subsequent sections did.

The Committee on Militia had this bill under consideration for many months, and we heard representatives of the militia and of the War Department, and gave the subject very careful consideration. Every section was considered by itself, and the act as a whole was carefully considered. The report of the Committee on Militia is unanimous.

The officers and men of the Militia of the District of Columbia are very anxious to conform in their organization to that of the Regular Army, but are unable to do so until Congress passes this or a similar act. If it be not passed within a year, they will be deprived of their quota. We know of no reason why this bill should not pass. I will not detain the House with any further statement, but will be glad to answer any questions, and will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES], the author of the bill.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to make any explanation that may be desired. The object of the bill is to conform to the requirements of the Dick law. In order that the militia of the several States may derive benefit from the appropriation made by Congress, it is required that prior to such participation the organization of the militia in the various States shall conform to a general plan.

This bill is to make the Militia of the District of Columbia conform to the regular-army standard set by the department. There are but two changes of moment, one in reference to the pay of militia when ordered on duty and the other in reference to courts-martial. The courts-martial sections are 50 and 50 a, b, and c and are almost self-explanatory. The bill has been most carefully gone over by the War Department, the Judge-Advocate-General; General Drain, the head of the National Guard Association of the country, and General Brett, for many years at the head of the militia in the District. There has been no criticism that I have heard from any of the officers and men in the militia of the bill providing for the promotion in the line or in the staff. I understand there has been some criticism of that part of the bill on page 2, providing as to what shall constitute the organization of the National Guard. The criticism was to the provision—

That the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, shall have power to alter, divide, annex, consolidate, disband, or reorganize the same whenever in his judgment the efficiency of the forces will be thereby increased.

That was put into the bill after long debate and consideration with the department to simplify the act and make it possible in time of peace for the President and Commander in Chief to reduce to a necessary and proper minimum in order that the organization might continue without a disbandment, necessary under a fixed rule of strength.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman state whether or not the same provision is found in the organic law of which he speaks as that on page 2 of this bill, giving the power to the President to change conditions?

Mr. AMES. It is not. When I stated that this conformed to the organic law I intended to say that it conformed as nearly as it seemed possible to make it. There are two or three minor details, and this is considered one of the maximum, that differ from the organic law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this the chief difference?

Mr. AMES. Yes; this is one of the main differences.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman said a moment ago that there was some difference in the pay.

Mr. AMES. When the law was originally drawn it provided that the pay of the militiaman should be the multiple of his pay when called on extra duty.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that; the difference is in the original bill.

Mr. AMES. In the original bill it was three times, and this is twice as much.

Mr. STEENERSON. The organic act provided for the same pay as the Regular Army. In the bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts the original bill provided for three times the pay. Between the time that that first draft was reported and the reporting of this substitute bill Congress had passed a bill increasing the pay of the army, so that we thought it was necessary to cut this down in order to make it harmonious, and that is the explanation that ought to be made.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with this bill, and it is too long to understand it from the reading at the desk. But I want to make some inquiry in relation to it. What does the gentleman from Massachusetts mean by "the organic law" that he refers to?

Mr. AMES. I refer to the Dick law.

Mr. KEIFER. That is what I supposed it was.

Mr. STEENERSON. By the organic law I refer to the law of 1889. That is the organic act for the District Militia.

Mr. KEIFER. Then there is a difference among the members of the committee as to what is meant by the organic law?

Mr. AMES. That is the organic law, and this is to comply with the Dick law.

Mr. KEIFER. What difference is there allowed in the case of the militia in case the militia should be called into actual service under this and the Dick law, or is there any?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Dick law does not cover that point.

Mr. AMES. That is a detail which is not provided for in the Dick law.

Mr. KEIFER. The Dick law does provide what shall be done with the militia in a State in case they are called into actual service for any purpose—they would get the pay of officers and men in the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; because there is no other pay provided.

Mr. KEIFER. Precisely; because there is no other pay provided. Does this change that and fix a pay that is different from that of the Regular Army?

Mr. STEENERSON. In case of a riot it does, and so does the law of every State in the Union; it prescribes a higher pay for the men when called out in case of riot.

Mr. KEIFER. When there is danger.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, the gentleman is aware that the ordinary pay of civilians is several times that of the pay of a soldier, and it was thought just that they should be allowed twice the pay in these cases where the militia is called out to quell riot, tumult, or breach of the peace, or in aid of the civil authorities.

Mr. KEIFER. My understanding has been that soldiers in actual service are always called where there is some danger, but here an exception is made in case of riots and they are to be paid more. Is that the understanding?

Mr. AMES. Pay them double the pay.

Mr. KEIFER. What struck me from hearing the bill read—hearing a part of it only—was that this was giving an undue preference to the Militia of the District of Columbia over the militia of the different States, and in that respect it was magnifying——

Mr. MANN. Oh, in our State we pay more than is provided for in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. New York pays three times as much.

Mr. KEIFER. Not in the matter of payment alone, but in the matter of preference, in giving the militia of this District an organization that will be out of proportion to the militia of the different States, taking into consideration the population and the power and influence.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I think not. There is nothing in that objection. This militia is not any larger than it ought to be.

Mr. KEIFER. It seems to me that there is provided here a very considerable army, and a very considerable army of officers, sufficient to go to the field to wage a very considerable battle, altogether made up of the Militia of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no increase over the present strength, except as to the coast artillery.

Mr. KEIFER. It is an increase in the organization, if not in numbers; but it provides for an organization of a very large force, with general officers and colonels and staff officers of very high grade, and it seems to me from hearing it read that staff officers had a rank very much out of proportion to the number of the militia that would be in the ranks.

Mr. STEENERSON. We had hearings on that subject, and the Assistant Secretary of War, General Oliver, was there, and it was asserted—and I have no doubt it is correct—that it simply corresponds in organization with the corresponding organization of the Regular Army. There are no superfluous officers provided for. They are all necessary in order to correspond.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not going to oppose the bill, but I am inclined to think that when we come to organize under this law the Militia of this District, we will have a very considerable army in the city of Washington under the head of militia and under the directions, of course, of the Secretary of War or the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that if we do get a greater strength it would be a consummation devoutly to be wished, because certainly if there is any place in the country that needs a militia it is the seat of government.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought there was always kept about the seat of government, especially over here at Fort Myer, a very considerable number of Regulars.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no coast artillery here.

Mr. KEIFER. So that we would not be at the mercy of rioters without aid near at hand.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question, as to whether it would be a benefit generally to have the militia of the different States organized along the same lines, and if so, whether it would be desirable to have the District Militia organized along the same lines as the state militia.

Mr. KEIFER. I was under the impression, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to have uniformity in the organizations of the militia in all the States, the District, and the Territories, and not have two systems of organization in case we should have to call them out generally.

If this were an organization merely for the protection of the city of Washington or the District of Columbia, and that was all, it would not make very much difference whether there was uniformity or not; but there may come a time when we would expect to call, in case of war, for volunteers, and it is supposed—and that is a theory of the Dick bill—that the first to be called would be the organized militia of the different States; and it would be somewhat unfortunate, I think, if the Militia of the District of Columbia and of the different States, and so on, stood upon a different basis as to rank, if you please. We have generals provided for under this bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only one here.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the Dick bill was passed with the idea of having not only the States accept its provisions, but make their own statutory provisions conform with it, and that the purpose of this bill was to do that in the District of Columbia, under our control, which we expect the state legislatures to do in the States.

Mr. KEIFER. I think we probably go here a good ways beyond what the States generally will do, but I am not now speaking with great confidence, for I am not very familiar with this bill, to be candid about it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. On page 2 of the bill reported by the committee I see section 11 is struck out and another section 11 is incorporated. Now, as I understand that section 11, as found in the bill, it is a new section. Is that correct?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, there are only a few new words in it. It is substantially the old section, with a few new words, so as to fit it to the present situation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then let me ask you. I find in section 11, on page 2, of the bill now pending before the House, in a proviso, the following:

Provided, That the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, shall have power to alter, divide, annex, consolidate, disband, or reorganize the same whenever in his judgment the efficiency of the forces will be thereby increased—

And so forth.

Is that new language incorporated in this section 11, or is that language to be found in the original section 11, as found in the old organic law?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think that is new.

Mr. AMES. That is new.

Mr. COX of Indiana. If that is new, why was it incorporated in this bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman will understand that this section first undertakes to enumerate the different organizations constituting the militia, and then it gives a blanket authority to the President to change the organizations where they are required in the future. The regular army organization might be modified next year, and instead of coming to Congress, which is a very slow body to act, as we found it in this case especially—we have been waiting for six years now to get this bill passed—they could simply go to the President of the United States or to the War Department for a modification of the organization. If there was a different designation, if a captain should be called something else or a wagoner should be called a drayman or something like that—they have certain terms in the army organization, and in order to draw the pay while the militia is in the service of the United States they must be known by the same titles—and therefore it might occur in the future that a title would change from what is described in this section 11, and the War Department could then modify this act by an executive order giving the change of title, so that it would not need another act of Congress in order to pay them under their proper designation. That is the explanation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, I am seeking information. One question further. I understand the purpose of this bill is to enable the Militia in the District of Columbia to conform as near as practicable to the Dick bill. Is that correct?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is correct. In this instance the House of Representatives simply acts the same as the legislature of a State would do, like the legislature of Indiana, Ohio, or Minnesota, in conforming their local statutes to the Dick law. That is all.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am seeking information——

Mr. STEENERSON. And I hope you are getting it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And I desire to know whether or not there is anything in the Dick bill which empowers the President to change organizations such as you propose in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; that would not be in the Dick bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose the governor of a State calls out the troops of the State to quell a riot and they are for some time in service in doing so. Does the United States, under the existing law, the Dick law—that is what I have in mind—pay these troops or does the State pay them?

Mr. STEENERSON. The State pays them.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a State matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They do not, when called out by the governor of a State, in that case become Regulars or a part of the United States Army, but they are troops of the State and amenable to the laws of the State.

Mr. KEIFER. They stand exactly as though there had been no Dick law.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the quick way to explain the Dick law to the gentleman would be to say that Congress appropriates so much money and makes it a condition for any state or district militia to participate in that appropriation, whether of money or uniforms or ammunition, that they conform in their organization to the organization of the Regular Army. Now, that conformity is a condition precedent to their sharing in the appropriation. All the rest of the regulation for the militia is devolved upon the States. The local law of the State, Territory, or District must prescribe an organization to conform with that of the army.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And even though their organization conforms to the Dick law, and the governor calls them out to quell a riot or under other conditions, the State pays the troops.

Mr. STEENERSON. The State pays them in the instance I cited. There are cases where money comes out of the United States Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course they would not pay them if called out by the President. Then who would pay them?

Mr. STEENERSON. The United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They would be paid as regular troops?

Mr. STEENERSON. They would be paid as regular troops—the same as regular troops.

Mr. KEIFER. Called out on federal duty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to get that clear. The Dick law, as I understand it, did not affect anything at all that relates to purely state matters, and did not affect them over what they were before it was passed, so far as they were concerned.

Mr. FLOYD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLOYD. In regard to section 11, which has been under discussion, I desire to explain the matter as I understand it. It states that the President—

Shall have power to alter, divide, annex, consolidate, disband, or reorganize the same whenever in his judgment the efficiency of the forces will be thereby increased.

This is limited by the following portion of the section:

So as to conform to any organization, system of drill, or instruction now or hereafter adopted for the Army of the United States or the organized militia, and for that purpose the number of officers—may be increased to the extent made necessary by the new positions thus created.

And so forth—

The power is limited so as to make the militia organization conform to the organization of the Regular Army, and the purpose of this bill, as I understand it, is simply to make the District Militia conform in organization, armament, and discipline to the Regular Army, so that in case of war the two forces may be brought together, and, being trained in the same school of military tactics, would better harmonize. That is what I understand to be the purpose of the bill and the sole purpose of it.

It is true that under the provisions of the Dick bill, before a State or the District of Columbia can participate in the funds appropriated under that bill, it must conform to the requirements of that law, but the general purpose of the bill, of far greater importance than to get the money that is appropriated, is to put all the military forces of the United States, both of the States and in the District, and in the army, in an organization that is harmonious as to armament, discipline, and as to the organization.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. FLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. Does not the language of section 11 state the principal ground upon which the President may act, and that is to make the militia more efficient?

Mr. FLOYD. I think so; but he would be limited in his power in this, that he could make no change except to make it conform to the regulations and changes that are subsequently made in the Regular Army under authority of law after the passage of this act.

Mr. KEIFER. With a view to its increased efficiency?

Mr. FLOYD. With a view to its increased efficiency. That is the way I understand the section, and I see no objection whatever to it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there is no question in my mind but some bill of this character should pass—that there should be a bill passed by the Congress of the United States giving the District Militia the right of organization as now prescribed for the Regular Army. The bill, to my mind, is much better than the first bill introduced, and is, for all I know, a most excellent one as it stands. There are some things about it that I do not entirely approve, but the Committee on Militia undoubtedly have more information than I have. I see that they have changed the court-martial provision so as to remove the most objectionable feature of the bill as first reported. In that bill, as I remember now, they provided that the court-martial could take absolute jurisdiction of any witness and sentence him to jail for nonappearance in the court-martial, without having the federal court pass upon whether he was guilty of contempt or not. Now they put it the same as the Regular Army court-martial in that respect.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman will recall that this was submitted to the gentleman and was at his suggestion, and is written now exactly as the gentleman from Iowa wished it to be.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The court-martial feature is the same as provided in the Regular Army.

Mr. STEENERSON. The original bill provided that the District Militia have a court-martial just the same as the state militia, but at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] we took away that power.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think they ought to have the power to punish, but through the courts. It is too much power for a military court to punish a civilian.

Mr. STEENERSON. It ought to be satisfactory, because we followed the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is satisfactory; and I think the gentleman from Minnesota cordially approved the change.

Mr. STEENERSON. The committee was very glad to have the assistance of the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there are a large number of provisions here in regard to staff. They may be absolutely necessary. I have no doubt but they are or the gentleman from Minnesota would not have reported them. But you have in the District of Columbia two regiments and one battalion and provision for a small force of coast artillery.

Mr. STEENERSON. Two battalions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is not nearly a brigade, and yet you have an adjutant-general's department. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that in each regiment we have a full staff, and in each battalion we have an adjutant and a quartermaster and a commissary. We have an adjutant and quartermaster for each of the battalions in addition to the regimental adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary in the regular army organization. Now, we have here a staff that seems to me exceedingly top-heavy in that particular. They have two adjutant-generals, one of the rank of lieutenant-colonel and one of the rank of major, and so on through the staff. Now, if it is required here that they shall be the same as the organization of the army, that is all right. I would like to have the committee to make section 11, page 2, of the bill, a little more comprehensive than they have it, and after the word "artillery," in line 11, insert "to be organized by the President as provided for the Regular Army by existing law or regulations."

That would give him the right to organize these staff corps as the law requires the Regular Army to be organized. You go beyond that, and provide below that he can change their organization at his pleasure. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you put that amendment in there are four or five pages of this bill that are absolutely useless. In other words, after giving the President the right to change all this organization at his pleasure, to promote the efficiency of the Regular Army, you establish by law these staff corps, that every man in this House must know is exceedingly large for the size of the force. This was based, as I understand it—and if I am not mistaken I will be glad to be corrected by my friend from Minnesota—on the law of the State of New York. The State of New York has over eight times as many troops as we have here, and therefore would necessarily need a larger staff. Now, you have as large a staff here, to care for two regiments, as they have in the largest State in the Union. When they are called into service the present law provides that these organizations of the national guard shall go into the service as organized, does it not?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, my friend from Minnesota will readily see that the Government of the United States would never think of giving to two regiments and one battalion a staff corps equal to that of a division, and yet you give it in this bill. Now, if you think this language, authorizing the President to organize the Militia of the District of Columbia in accordance with the law prescribing the organization of the Regular Army, I can not see what harm would be done if you do it that way. I want at the proper time to move to strike out all of the provisions for this staff corps. Then you follow that with your proposition as it is in the bill, giving the President the right to alter or change, subdivide, and do as he pleases with this organization.

Now, if we are going to fix by law a staff corps as expressed by Congress, this would do; but then you ought not to give the President the right to disband that organization whenever he desired to change it. If Congress absolutely fixes the staff corps, only Congress should change it. In other words, it may be that this organization would be carried and paid by the War Department; but as one Member of Congress, I would rather the War Department should be responsible for such an organization as that for two regiments than be responsible for it myself.

Mr. KEIFER. Before you go from that. Are there not a considerable number of staff officers provided for in the bill to which you refer that are unknown to the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not mean staff officers who relate to regiments, but to details in making up organizations. Are there not a number there——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; in the War Department there are adjutants-general, quartermasters-general, inspectors-general, judge-advocates-general, and all these staff officers.

Mr. KEIFER. They are detailed officers, are they not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are detailed officers.

Mr. KEIFER. But this provides for separate officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This provides for a permanent corps. They are not detailed.

Mr. KEIFER. No; these are not detailed at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; they are not detailed. I notice another thing here, if the gentleman will pardon me, and I say this not in any spirit of criticism, but merely from a desire to get the best we can for the militia; because I realize, as does the gentleman and every other Member of the House, that our Regular Army is small. It is only the very first line of defense of the country, and the national guard and the unorganized militia back of them, still more powerful, are the great fighting arm of this Government and always will be; but I notice on page 20 it provides that each mounted officer shall be paid a reasonable per diem compensation for horses actually furnished.

Now, the Regular Army does not get that. Every field officer is compelled to be mounted, and his pay is fixed on the basis of being a mounted officer, and he furnishes his horse. Now, if you will put in this bill an amendment, "below the grade of major," you will make it conform to the regular army organization. I am not talking about your pay for men. I think you ought to pay them more than the regular pay of the enlisted men in the army; but the pay of officers is ample for those who go out in case of riot, or for any other purpose. Every time you have an annual encampment all officers provided for in this bill are ordered out for the maneuvers. You say, "ordered out in case of riot or for any any other cause." They are ordered out for maneuvers two weeks each year. Every colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major would receive what is called "a reasonable per diem" for his horse. Now, that would be fixed by whom? By the Secretary of War? It evidently means that Congress believes that, in addition to his pay as a major or a lieutenant-colonel or colonel or brigadier-general, he ought to have extra pay for being mounted, when his pay is fixed by the pay of officers of the same grade in the Regular Army, who have to keep their horses without any extra pay. If he is below the grade of major, the regular army pay provides that a captain shall have so much if he has 1 horse, and so much additional for 2, and nothing if the Government furnishes the horses. It seems to me this ought to correspond with that.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. AMES. I have served with a light battery in the Massachusetts Militia, and I think I am very safe in saying that there was never an officer in the Massachusetts State Militia who did not spend a good deal more than he received, furnishing this, that, and the other thing for the benefit of his organization. So, although an officer's pay is a little larger than that of the enlisted men, it is paid out many times over in the course of a year simply for the good of the militia. He gets nothing at all out of it except love of the work and his desire to promote the efficiency of the organization.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When the gentleman was a member of the Massachusetts Militia, did the State do all the paying, or did the Federal Government pay a part and the State a part?

Mr. AMES. The State paid all, except what the officers gave out of their own private purse.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very well. This is a proposition for the Federal Government to pay. Now, what does a major get?

Mr. AMES. The Federal Government is paying for the militia in the District just what it is paying in each of the States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What pay did the State of Massachusetts give a major when the gentleman from Massachusetts was a member of the Massachusetts Guard?

Mr. AMES. My recollection is that it was the pay when called out on duty.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What pay? It was fixed by the State, I suppose. My State paid the officers and privates the same pay, $2 a day, some years ago. I do not know what now.

Mr. AMES. They paid in proportion.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You would have to get at that to know the justice of it. Here the officers are given the pay of the Regular Army. A major gets $3,000 and a colonel gets $5,000 a year. Now, he gets his pay while there and his pay is graded as a mounted officer, because he is a mounted officer when he becomes a field officer. There is no extra pay for a field officer in the army because the law requires him to be mounted.

Mr. KEIFER. The captain on mounted service gets a different pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but last session we provided that where a captain was required to be mounted and did not furnish his own horse he got no extra pay. Where he furnishes a horse he gets the pay of $150 a year for 1 horse and for 2 horses he gets $200 a year.

Mr. AMES. I can explain a little further, perhaps, to the gentleman. When we went out as a light battery to Framingham we had to hire horses for a week or ten days. We went to the livery stables and got bids. The horses we had to take were horses poor in character, and we became more or less responsible, for we had to guarantee that they would be brought back in as good condition as when taken, and we had to pay an enormous price for that, so much so that the pay allowed by the State would not begin to pay for the horses. If a mounted officer is called out he is not going to take a horse that he has been boarding all the year round, but he has to go to some livery stable and get a good horse and pay a very large price for him, sufficient to cover accidents, etc.

Mr. MANN. And that would be a reasonable amount?

Mr. AMES. Yes; a reasonable amount.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No matter what it is, you have to pay anything that the commanding officer certifies as to the amount. Now, going back to page 11, it seems to me that the commanding officer is given too much power in section 23b.

That whenever, in the opinion of the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia, an officer of the said militia has become incapacitated for the performance of duty for any reason, the commanding general shall submit the name of such officer to the Secretary of War, with a view to his being ordered before a board of examination, to be appointed by the said commanding general, which board shall examine said officer as to his physical, mental, and military qualifications.

Now, why not make the board appointed by the Secretary of War? The commanding general may have a prejudice against any officer of his command, and he prefers the charges and appoints the board to try him, and can turn out every member of the board under the same machinery if they do not do what he wishes them to. I am not criticising the commanding general. I think he is able and efficient, but he may not live forever; they may get another. But no matter who the man is I would not give him the privilege of preferring charges against a man and then authorize him to appoint the court to try the officer, holding the power to discharge those whom he does not want and who do not do what he orders them to do, whether right or wrong. It ought to be changed so as to give some man, either the Secretary of War or the President, the power to appoint the board that tries the officer. Let the commanding general make the charges, for he is the proper one to do it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. KEIFER. The President can do it in the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; he does. I think that ought to be guarded. Now, I do not care to antagonize this committee. I am a member of the Committee on Militia and proud of it, although I do not work much at it. I will say that when the Secretary of War and the chairman of the committee and myself were discussing that they thought this amendment would be all right. But the committee decided that they would not accept it. I feel like testing the opinion of the House, and at the proper time I shall move, on page 2, after the words "field artillery," to insert "to be organized by the President, as provided for the Regular Army by the present law or regulations." Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, as to the first objection of the gentleman from Iowa, it is true that the original bill was reported. It struck me to be a very easy way out of the matter—that is, to strike out all of that page and simply give the authority of the President to prescribe the organization. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is correct in stating that I at first thought I would favor that when the Assistant Secretary of War and myself went and called upon the gentleman in his committee room; but upon consideration, when the full committee was in attendance, with the exception of the gentleman from Iowa, who was too busy with his Committee on Military Affairs to attend, we came to the conclusion that it was a mistake to act upon that suggestion, and for this reason—and I think the House and the gentleman from Iowa, if he will give me his attention, will see it:

The act of 1889 prescribes the organization for the District Militia. That is a statute; it is an act of Congress. To change that act of Congress requires another act of Congress. That is the object of the present proposed act of Congress. In this act we can propose that for the future the President may change the organization prescribed. We can authorize the President of the United States to change the organization herein prescribed by a future order, an executive order; but it would hardly be competent for us in this act to authorize him by executive order to repeal the act of 1889. This bill with that part stricken out which the gentleman proposes to strike out will leave the old sections of the act of 1889 regarding organization unrepealed. Furthermore, the logical and correct way is to prescribe by act of Congress what the organization of the District Militia shall be, and then to give this authority to the President, for the future, to change it where change may become necessary, in order to make it conform to the changing conditions and organizations of the Regular Army. We in effect would authorize a repeal by executive order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, right on that point, the gentleman says that we can not let the President change the present organization. We have got to fix a specific organization in order to allow him to have the power to change. Now, you have a specific organization here. You provide in this bill that the National Guard shall consist of certain officers and men, certain organizations. I want to ask the gentleman this question: If we put right in this law this language—

To be organized by the President as now provided for the Regular Army by law or regulation.

Are we not repealing everything that now stands as to the organization; and when the President acts, is it not as lawful to change the old organization as the provision below there which says that the President of the United States shall have power to alter, divide, consolidate, disband, and reorganize? Is it not the same power to now make the organization as prescribed by law for the Regular Army—is it not giving him absolute power just as you gave him power below to change all that we now enact?

Mr. STEENERSON. This matter was considered by the committee, and we have some eminent lawyers on that committee. I am very sorry that we did not have the benefit of the opinion of the gentleman from Iowa, but we did not agree with the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is all good natured with all of us. I am not antagonizing, but I want to ask the gentleman now if you can give power, from section 12 down, to the President to change every organization in the bill, can not you give him power, when we enumerate what we have given to him—the organization now provided by law? Then, if there is any variation in the organization we are not responsible for it.

Mr. STEENERSON. As a prelude to that, I would ask the gentleman if he conceives a difference between authorizing the President to do a thing for the future and authorizing the President to repeal an act of Congress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We repeal the act by this language. He does not repeal the act of Congress; we do it. He is acting under authority of law. Let me make it a little clearer. The law now requires all military militia organizations to comply with the organization of the Regular Army.

The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and he is Commander in Chief of the District Militia. If we authorize him to organize the District Militia, he can not do it without this language, because the law fixes it. He has to have power to change that in order to do it. By adopting this language, do we not give him power to organize it as now prescribed by the Regular Army, so as to comply with the Dick bill, and when that is done you have no use for 5 or 6 pages of this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. What is the objection to doing what we ought to do? We ought to prescribe by act of Congress what the organized militia shall consist of, and it seems to me that the only object which can be attained by the gentleman's suggestion is to save a few sections or a few words.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We would save about 4 or 5 pages here that this House is not at all familiar with and which it does not know whether it complies with the Regular Army or not. But there is one thing certain. If we adopt this, it is the law, and Congress is responsible.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that we tried very hard to get him to be present at the committee meeting.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is very true, and it was purely my fault.

Mr. STEENERSON. Not only that, but we sent for him and notified him, and the chairman of the committee took it upon himself to go to the gentleman with the Assistant Secretary of War and with the adjutant-general of the District of Columbia and explain this matter to him, and he expressed himself as satisfied, as I recall it, though he thought it was more convenient to have a short bill than a long bill; but the gentleman from Iowa did not suggest then that there was anything wrong about these provisions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; the gentleman from Iowa simply suggested this—that here was a large staff that looked to him like it was too large. The gentleman from Iowa is not going to criticise, but the gentleman from Iowa and the Members of the House are not certain that a division of the national guard as small as is the District of Columbia Militia should have such a staff as this. The gentleman from Iowa is perfectly willing to leave that to the War Department, under the law regulating the organization of the Regular Army. If the Regular Army will then require it, let them do it.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Iowa will understand and admit that the Assistant Secretary of War expressly stated that this was exactly the same organization he would wish if he were allowed blanket authority to do so. You recollect that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, what is the objection——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My point is, I would rather for them to do it than Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would rather Congress would stand up like a man and pass its own bills.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If I had my way I would not make the staff so large for such a small organization.

Mr. AMES. There are several considerations to be considered in a measure of this sort, and one was that such a bill would be a model for the States to follow in conforming to the Dick law. Now, with your proposed amendment you say several of these pages would become unnecessary, did you not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did, and I would propose, if this is adopted, to strike them out.

Mr. AMES. The committee decided, regretting your forced absence, that we wanted to frame a bill such as would serve as a model for other States in conforming their militia legislation to the Dick bill, and so these several pages became specifications of what should be done. Put in your amendment to strike this out, and it ceases to be a model for other States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is not this simply following the New York law?

Mr. AMES. I do not understand so.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My understanding from the chairman of the committee and others is that it is.

Mr. AMES. The committee was informed this was following the desires and recommendations of the War Department, and not New York State.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My understanding is that you form a model on a model by readopting a model.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that we had before the Committee on Militia not only the laws of New York, but 15 or 20 different statutes. We had a collection of statutes, including even the statutes of Iowa, Minnesota, Massachusetts, and New York, and this matter was gone over very carefully, and, as I understood, the gentleman from Iowa was perfectly satisfied with the provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have never been satisfied to reenact into positive law such a staff organization and I have expressed myself this way. If we strike out the other and give the President absolute power—of course he acts through the War Department, and their decision then would conform to the laws of the Regular Army—I would be satisfied with their organization.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Iowa admits, then, if we strike this out then and leave to the War Department the authority to prescribe what the organization shall be that they would immediately issue an order prescribing exactly the same organization and same staff corps as are provided for here.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the law requires it, I suppose they would. But it seems to me, in all fairness, I will say to my friend from Minnesota, that the staff organization provided for in this bill is so exceedingly top-heavy that the War Department would hesitate a long time before they would become responsible for issuing the order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I beg to differ with the gentleman. It is not top-heavy, and General Oliver stated in the gentleman's presence he would issue an order prescribing exactly the same organization and same staff. The objection was suggested to him by the gentleman from Iowa, and he answered it was not top-heavy, that it was only in conformity with the organization of the Regular Army, and he would issue an order prescribing exactly the same thing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then I will ask the gentleman, who is very familiar with military matters, if he does not regard an organization top-heavy with an adjutant-general, an assistant adjutant-general, in addition to an adjutant-general of the regiment and three battalion adjutants of the regiment; that is ten adjutants for two regiments. Now, is not that a little top-heavy?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will answer the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Minnesota does not pretend to be an expert on military affairs; but he does realize this, that "a little learning is a dangerous thing," and there are some people on the floor of this House that know so much about military matters that nobody can understand them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no doubt of that. It is the hardest work in the world for a fellow to understand himself. Remember that each regiment has a quartermaster and 3 battalion quartermasters. You have 4 quartermasters to a regiment. And then you have a quartermaster's department, which will consist of 1 quartermaster with the rank of major, and 1 quartermaster with the rank of captain, and 2 post quartermaster-sergeants. You have a quartermaster-sergeant in every company in the regiment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would it not be necessary if you wanted to have a larger militia in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you had enough to form a full brigade, then I would concede that your model might be all right. Suppose we have war to-morrow. That is what this militia is for—to form the first line of defense. All of these staff officers would be taken into action, and the organized Guard of the District of Columbia would be compelled to go with some other State in order to form a brigade, and then you would have a double force of staff officers all through.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken when he says the staff officers would be taken out in the field in case they are called out by the United States Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The law requires that they shall be taken in case of war.

Mr. STEENERSON. You have your own staff corps when you organize your army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A volunteer army, yes. There is another bill for that purpose that is entirely independent of the national guard measures.

Mr. STEENERSON. You would not use this staff corps at all?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You go into camp here with the ten-day maneuvers and you have got all of these different staff officers in the field, and also in case of riot. They are of no value to the officers of the army. It does not amount to very much, but it is a top-heavy organization, and I would prefer, as I said before, for the War Department to be responsible for it than for Congress to solemnly enact it into law.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like the House to understand the gentleman's position. He prefers to have the War Department prescribe what the organization shall be instead of having it done by act of Congress. That is, we ought to shirk our duty in legislating for the militia.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that. What I propose here is to give the President the power to organize this guard under the provision's regulation. They have the same force as law, as the gentleman knows. I would give him absolute power to conform to this, but you propose to enact into law the entire staff corps on the theory that it is required by law. Now, if that is true, if your contention is correct that this absolutely conforms to the organization of the Regular Army, no harm can be done by my amendment. If you should happen to be mistaken in that the War Department and the President are limited by the law requiring an organization on the regular army basis, when they come to make the organization they have got to lop off some of these things.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman know that the State of Iowa has a similar provision, first prescribing what the organization of the militia shall be, and then giving the blanket authority to the governor?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and the gentleman from Iowa further knows that we have a full brigade in Iowa, so we are entitled to a brigade organization.

Mr. STEENERSON. Massachusetts has the same thing. It seems to me that here we ought to have a skeleton big enough so that we can fill it up. This does not cost anything. We ought to have the machinery. The State of New York, the State of Ohio, and every other State having a law governing the militia has a similar provision. This is only a technicality, and it seems to me rather too critical an objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not critical at all. I am liberal.

Mr. STEENERSON. We certainly tried to satisfy the gentleman, but it seems to be impossible. I will say that I can not believe the suggestion is a wise one. I think it would hurt the bill very much to accept the suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill by section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following amendments are hereby made to an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the organization of the Militia of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889:

Strike out the whole of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 10. That the organized militia shall be composed of volunteers, and shall be designated the National Guard of the District of Columbia."

Strike out the whole of section 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 11. That the national guard shall consist of one brigadier-general, an adjutant-general's department, an inspector-general's department, a judge-advocate-general's department, a quartermaster's department, a subsistence department, a medical department and hospital corps, a pay department, a corps of engineers, an ordnance department, a signal corps, a coast artillery corps, 2 regiments and 1 separate battalion of infantry, 4 companies of coast artillery, a troop of cavalry, and 1 battery of field artillery: Provided, That the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, shall have power to alter, divide, annex, consolidate, disband, or reorganize the same whenever in his judgment the efficiency of the forces will be thereby increased, and he shall at any time have power to change the organization of departments, staff corps, regiments, battalions, companies, troop, and battery so as to conform to any organization, system of drill, or instruction now or hereafter adopted for the Army of the United States or the organized militia, and for that purpose the number of officers and non-commissioned officers of any grade in departments, staff corps, regiments, battalions, companies, troop, and battery may be increased to the extent made necessary by the new positions thus created."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not desire to debate the bill any further, but I move to amend by inserting after the word "artillery," in line 11, page 2, the words "to be organized by the President as now provided for the Regular Army by law or regulation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "artillery," insert "to be organized by the President as now provided for the Regular Army by law or regulation."

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The Committee on Militia is a full-grown committee. Its members are conscientious. It attends to its duties. It regrets that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs can not be present at its deliberations. It did its best to get his cooperation and assistance, and in its judgment and in the judgment of the War Department, and of the head of the National Association of Militia, and of Colonel Brett, who for a long time was in command of the militia, a regular army officer, it was believed that this was the proper form for the bill. In addition to that it made it a model for other States to follow in the alteration of their militia laws, so that they might conform to the requirements of the War Department. This bill represents the wisdom of the department and the wisdom of the committee. I think perhaps there may have been a slight feeling among the members, in their refusal to go against their first judgment to meet the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, a feeling of proper pride in their own capacity to do what was right and what seemed best, all things considered, when the gentleman from Iowa, a member of the committee, could not appear and be with them in their deliberations. I think if he had, and if he had gone into the matter as carefully as we did, he would have felt the justice of the position of the committee and would not have raised this opposition.

Mr. FLOYD. I am opposed to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, and I desire to state my reasons for my objections.

The Committee on Militia have carefully considered this bill, and we have made it conform to the regulations of the Regular Army as nearly as may be. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, as I understand it, is to eliminate these sections and give this power to the Secretary of War. I think that would be a dangerous proceeding. It would totally change the purposes of this section.

This section gives the President of the United States the authority to make certain changes in order to make the militia organizations conform to those of the Regular Army, but Congress must first define and determine what these organizations shall be in the Regular Army. Then we delegate to the highest officer in the country the authority to change these militia organizations to the extent of making them conform to those of the Regular Army and no further; but it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa gives the whole power to the Secretary of War in regard to these organizations, and takes away from Congress the power to fix these regulations. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I was not disposed to further interpose in this discussion. My impression was, on hearing the bill read, that it was top-heavy—that it had too much staff and too little militia at the bottom. A gentleman—Mr. Shallenbarger, who served with the greatest distinction in this House many years ago—told me of an incident that took place between himself and President Lincoln the night before he was shot, and it has some application here. Mr. Shallenbarger went to see President Lincoln about an appointment in the army. The war was about over. He went late at night and found the President sitting in his library, with his legs wrapped around each other, twisted in his not unusual way, with a toe under his ankle, as was usual, and he seemed to be very morose. Mr. Shallenbarger said he felt ashamed to intrude on him at that hour, and told him he would be glad to be excused. The President said to him: "Tell what you came for." Mr. Shallenbarger said: "Mr. President, I came to ask you to appoint a man in the staff of the army." Thereupon the President unwound himself, changed to a cheerful mood, arose, and said: "Your suggestion reminds me of a story." And he proceeded in his mimical way to relate it. It may have been his last story.

"There was a lady came upon the Sangamon River in Illinois at an early day that had the reputation of being able to make a white shirt with a collar and a bosom to it. An Irishman, who was about to get married, applied to her to make him a white shirt. She made it and starched it." I am abridging the story. "She took it to him and he put it on wrong end up. He then went back with it and said to her he wanted a shirt not all collar." Mr. Lincoln then said, "Now, Mr. Shallenbarger, you want all staff and no army." We have got a great deal of staff here in this District of Columbia militia bill; a great deal of collar, and very little shirt. And that is my objection to this bill. It would be partly corrected, largely perhaps, if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] were adopted. It happens under the modern system of camping and drilling for instruction that the Regular Army is often called out with the militia; and it is a wise mode of instruction, for the militia especially. Now, if we have any such establishment as this bill provides for, staff officers of such high rank, with large numbers of adjutants-general, inspectors-general, quartermasters, and so on, we will find that there will be a conflict, and that the staff of this militia will outrank the staff of the Regular Army in these annual drills. I have said enough to show that I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. It not only does not improve the bill, but injures it. The bill as drawn provides for the organization of a staff that is no more than is necessary, corresponding with the army organization. If there should be any more, under this authority to abridge and discontinue organizations the President or Secretary of War can discontinue any office that may be thought to be more than necessary. But there is not any such. And it is admitted by the propounder of this amendment that the Secretary of War stated, and it is an undisputed fact, if the authority was left blank instead of prescribed, as it is in this bill, that he would issue an order creating these staff corps exactly as they are here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa shall prevail, that then the organization of the District Militia will absolutely and exactly conform to the organization of the Regular Army?

Mr. STEENERSON. It will; and whether we accept it or not will not affect that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If that is all you want, and it is absolutely certain under the amendment, why stickle for the language in the bill?

Mr. AMES. It not only does that, but does some other things.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think it leaves the matter clear. The gentleman from Iowa's amendment does not leave any discretion whatever in the President of the United States. It gives him the power to organize the District Militia as prescribed by law for the Regular Army organization. It is not a dangerous power, because with it you give the President of the United States the right to change every one of the provisions of this bill if he desired to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In the two clauses at the end of the paragraph?

Mr. STEENERSON. Why, certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My amendment simply makes it certain that the organization of the District Militia shall conform to the organization of the Regular Army, and your proposition makes it so that if it is the action of the Congress the President will say Congress declared that they desired it that way, and he will act accordingly. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all of pages 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and down to the end of line 10 on page 9.

Mr. KEIFER. That will be in conformity with the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Absolutely, and allow the entire organization to be made in accordance with that of the Regular Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Strike out all of pages 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, down to the end of line 10 on page 9.

Mr. MANN. These provisions which the gentleman from Iowa proposes to strike out now provide in detail for the officers of the militia?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman's amendment would leave it so that the officers will be in accordance with those provided for in the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; both the regimental, battalion, and staff corps. In these provisions the organization of all the branches was provided for.

Mr. MANN. And this amendment will make it conform purely to the law organizing the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. These provisions were only a rehash of what is in the law with reference to the Regular Army, as far as the regimental, battalion, and staff organization was concerned.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa in what situation it will leave the organic act?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You have repealed all of the organic act by my amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think, in view of the adoption of the amendment, that this would necessarily follow.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have repealed the organic act prescribing the organization by the amendment which has just been adopted, placing it in the hands of the President.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think this ought to be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23 b. That whenever, in the opinion of the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, an officer of the said militia has become incapacitated for the performance of duty for any reason, the commanding general shall submit the name of such officer to the Secretary of War, with a view to his being ordered before a board of examination, to be appointed by the said commanding general, which board shall examine said officer as to his physical, mental, and military qualifications.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "said commanding general," in line 16 of section 23 b, and insert the words "Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, line 16, strike out the words "the commanding general" and insert the words "Secretary of War."

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if he is not a little bit inconsistent? By the force of his argument we have stricken out several pages on the plea that it was top-heavy, and now he is topping a little militia organization in the District of Columbia with the Secretary of War instead of the commanding general.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts through with his question?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that that question seems not to have been well considered before it was asked. The other matter was with reference to the organization. The object of the bill is to make the Regular Army and the District of Columbia National Guard conform exactly. Here is a proposition by which the commanding general prefers charges against the officers or men of his command, and under the provisions of the law drawn by the gentleman from Massachusetts and reported by the committee the same commanding general appoints the judges to try the men, and I say it is placing altogether too much power in the hands of the commanding general.

Mr. AMES. Can not the Secretary of War do the same thing?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; the Secretary of War has none of the prejudices that come from intimate association such as the commanding general might have. I have no doubt that the commanding general would give a fair trial, but he might not; his prejudices might be so great that he might do the accused an injustice. The Secretary of War being above and beyond the associations with these officers, he can appoint a board and give them a fair trial.

Mr. AMES. I have no objection to the amendment; I am simply pointing out that the Secretary of War might do just what the gentleman says the commanding general would do.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; that is inconceivable; he has not the same associations.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Following section 49 insert the following additional section:

"SEC. 49 a. That whenever the National Guard of the District of Columbia shall be ordered to duty in case of riot, tumult, breach of the peace, or whenever called in aid of the civil authorities, all enlisted men who do duty shall be paid at the rate equivalent to two times the pay of enlisted men of the Regular Army of like grade. Commissioned officers who do duty shall be entitled to and shall receive the same pay and allowances as commissioned officers of like grade of the Regular Army. Each mounted officer and enlisted man shall be paid a reasonable per diem compensation for each horse actually furnished and used by him: Provided, That when the National Guard of the District of Columbia is called into the actual service of the United States the officers and enlisted men shall, during their time of service, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by law for the Regular Army."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on line 1, page 20, I move to insert, after the word "officer," the words "below the grade of major," so that it will conform to that of the Regular Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 1, after the word "officer," insert the words "below the grade of major."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 54 b. That no action or proceeding shall be prosecuted or maintained against a member of a military court, or officer or person acting under its authority or reviewing its proceedings, on account of the approval or imposition or execution of any sentence, or the imposition or collection of fine or penalty, or the execution of any warrant, writ, execution, process, or mandate of a military court.

SEC. 54 c. That the jurisdiction of the courts and boards established by this act shall be presumed, and the burden of proof shall rest on any person asking to oust such courts or boards of jurisdiction in any action or proceedings.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move to strike out sections 54 b and 54 c. I will, however, make my amendment in separate form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, strike out section 54 b.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, there may be a good reason for that provision, and if there is I would be glad to hear what it is. It seems to entirely exempt from all sort of remedial procedure anybody and everybody connected with one of these courts-martial, whether it is proceeding regularly or in good faith or the reverse. Some member of the committee doubtless can explain the purpose and scope of it, and I would be glad for one to hear from him.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES].

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, this was suggested by General Davis, of the War Department. This has all been gone over most carefully by the department. All actions by courts-martial, summary courts, and others are reviewed by the commanding general or Secretary of War, the President of the United States, if you please, and this is to prevent, on the face of it, action against a man performing what he considers to be his duty as a member of a court. It is simply preserving the integrity of a court. That is all it is for and all it is meant for.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It seems to me it goes too far. There is no such exemption to those who act in the civil courts. There might be such a thing as an entirely unwarranted proceeding.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would say that I believe similar provisions are in all of the state laws, including the State of Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That may be, but that is not a very strong presumptive suggestion. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think my friend from Missouri will readily admit that it is rather an unusual thing to give permission to sue a court. If the court-martial unjustly sentences a man, it does not deprive the convicted party of his rights under the law to immediately appeal and be relieved of any punishment, but if you can harrass the court all the time, men would hesitate to sit on a court-martial, I should imagine.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand that, but it seems to me this is too broad. This might be a case, exceptional, if you please, where the prosecution would be malicious, or where there would be inflicted upon the person prosecuted, in the course of the prosecution, hardships and wrongs for which there would be no warrant. It might be a case where there was a finding or an execution of a finding or an attempt at execution of a finding, which would amount to great and malicious oppression and wrong, and yet the language is broad enough to entirely protect the willful wrongdoers from any prosecution or suit for damages.

Of course I understand that one dealing with causes in a judicial capacity or an administrative capacity in the military courts or in the civil courts is ordinarily, and ought to be, protected from any prosecuton, civil or criminal; but it seems to me that this section ought in itself to negative and ought to leave as an exception oppressive conduct, unwarranted conduct, conduct that clearly is not within the scope of duty or law. Under this provision I take it that in the grossest kind of a case, in a case of the grossest abuse or the grossest assumption of power, there would be no redress whatever. That surely is not the intention. By modifying this a little all abuse might be entirely avoided and obviated. What I suggest is that the provision is too broad. The language not only covers the numerous cases which it ought to cover, but it is broad enough to cover cases which it ought not to cover.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Missouri certainly will agree with me that we could not take away any right that a man might have where the court acts beyond its jurisdiction.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not know about that. We ought not to assume to do it.

Mr. STEENERSON. We are simply protecting the members of the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. We ought not to assume to do it. The question of whether we can do it or not is a question that would arise if there were an abuse. We ought not to assume or attempt to do it.

Mr. STEENERSON. We have a right, and we ought to protect the members of the court from harassing suits.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is true.

Mr. STEENERSON. And it will never be construed to mean to take away a man's constitutional right to remedy if he has been wronged by a trespasser who acted beyond the authority of the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The language is just as broad as it can be:

> No action or proceeding shall be prosecuted or maintained against a member of a military court, or officer or person acting under its authority or reviewing its proceedings on account of the approval or imposition or execution of any sentence, or the imposition or collection of fine or penalty, or the execution of any warrant, writ, execution, process, or mandate of a military court.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is not that right?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It is too broad.

Mr. STEENERSON. It can not be any less broad and serve the purpose. Has the gentleman looked into this matter especially?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it is the only way you can protect the members of the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. My colleague [Mr. ALEXANDER] suggests that an improvement be made by inserting the phrase "in the absence of malice or oppression." That certainly would improve it very much, I think, and yet it would answer every proper purpose.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not see that the insertion of the word "malice" would make any difference.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It would make a lot of difference.

Mr. STEENERSON. Suppose a court-martial might sentence a man to be shot. You would not want the men who did the shooting—who were ordered to do it as a matter of duty—to be indicted and prosecuted for that, because they would be entirely following orders.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of course not.

Mr. STEENERSON. This provision is not a new provision to this bill. It is an old provision that is inserted in all laws regarding court-martial statutes for the militia. I do not believe that the suggested amendment would improve it. I think it would distort it very much.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I think not; but I do not care to take more time, and I will just let the motion stand to strike out 54 b.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 54 c.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 54 c, page 21.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that that section follows and supplements the preceding section, 54 b, which the committee voted not to strike out. Section 54 c provides—

> That the jurisdiction of the courts and boards established by this act shall be presumed, and the burden of proof shall rest on any person asking to oust such courts or boards of jurisdiction in any action of proceedings.

Now, I admit I have not studied this subject and am not very intimately acquainted with it, so the reasons for this do not exactly occur to me, and I will be glad for some member of the committee to state them.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say that this is not a new provision to this bill. It is contained in every act governing the militia of the different States, and I think it is reasonable that the courts be presumed to be legal and not the reverse, and it seems to me it is a proper protection around a court-martial.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It is a pretty good protection for the court, possibly, but it is not so good for the persons brought before the court.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes. Of course we could not make it conclusive presumption; it can be overcome by evidence.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is the same presumption that prevails in fact in any civil court. They are presumed to be legal and to have jurisdiction, and if you allege want of jurisdiction you must show it, and it is the same thing here.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that this provision is, as this entire law is in fact, for the District of Columbia Militia. Now, then, in time of peace, or in any time, in any proceeding in which any board or commission may take cognizance of a case, if this provision stands, it is to be presumed that there is jurisdiction.

Now, I can understand how in time of war, in the army and in the army organization, where arbitrary means might seem to be necessary, there might be such a provision as that incorporated and possibly be valuable, but for an ordinary regulation for the militia in time of peace to presume when a militia organization, a court, or board assumes to take jurisdiction of a matter that it has jurisdiction, so that every one over whom it attempts to exercise this jurisdiction has placed upon him the burden of showing that it has not jurisdiction, that seems to me to be going a long way. Now, whether this be found in other enactments or not is not conclusive of the question whether it should be here. It is all well enough to provide for the militia; it is all well enough to have these courts-martial and boards, but it is going a little far, it seems to me, when they can be called into existence so easily, when they may be called into existence when there is no occasion for them, owing to some pique or some little disturbance incident to the organization, to conclude or to go a long way toward concluding the question of jurisdiction by presuming it.

The question of jurisdiction is one that ought to be open and one which very fairly could be well left, it seems to me, to be disposed of when it arises. The question being raised with this provision in, the board or court-martial says: "We have jurisdiction; that is presumable. If you question our jurisdiction, convince us, if you can, that we haven't it."

It seems to me this is an unnecessary thing. It does not add to the efficiency of the militia, and it tends to lessen the rights of the individual militiaman, who is a citizen, who is not in the army except in a tentative way, who is in civil life, who is in the course of preparation for the duties of army life, if there be occasion for it. Whatever is given to the board, whatever is given to the court-martial, is that much taken from him, the citizen, and it seems to me that there is no necessity for taking so much from him.

If it meets any particular cases, which I suppose we could easily imagine and which might readily arise, it might prove to be burdensome upon the citizen and of no benefit to the organization. If this bill be passed or be not passed, the efficiency of the militia will certainly not be lessened by the elimination of this provision. On that theory I move to strike it out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope the amendment will be voted down. It is simply giving this court the presumption that is given to all other courts, and this change is not asked for, as I understand it, by members of the militia. The members of the militia and officers have expressed themselves satisfied with the provision as it stands.

Mr. MACON. I dislike to disagree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on a legal proposition. I know his judgment is always good, but he, like other men, can sometimes get an idea in connection with a thing that does not agree with the ideas of others. In this particular instance he has advanced a proposition that does not accord with my idea of the correct thing to do in connection with this matter.

I do not understand why this court should be deprived of its jurisdictional presumption when it is allowed to all other courts. The jurisdiction of civil and criminal courts are presumed, and when attack is made upon any matter pending before them on jurisdictional grounds the burden necessarily rests upon the attacking party to show that the court has not the jurisdiction that it assumes. And so it would be here. When the military court undertook to act and an objection was raised to its jurisdictional right to proceed, all that would have to be done would be to show, just as it would have to be shown in other courts, that it did not have proper jurisdiction of the matter before it. But until that was done it looks like the presumption ought to remain that the court is proceeding within its jurisdictional right.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, just one word more. The question here really is whether there is to be any presumption indulged. Now, as suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], the question of jurisdiction may be raised in any court. The further question is, What happens when it is raised? Do you presume that it exists, or do you not indulge any presumption about it? I am taking the position that as to a matter of this kind there ought not to be any presumption indulged, neither a presumption that jurisdiction does not exist or does exist.

I think the line in regard to presumptions as applied to courts is about this: That as to courts of general jurisdiction, when that kind of a court takes cognizance of any proceeding, the presumption in favor of its jurisdiction lies because its jurisdiction is general, and the presumption is that that particular case and the particular persons with whom it would deal in that case fall within the lines of that general jurisdiction. But as to an inferior court, no presumption of jurisdiction ever lies in favor of it. The question being raised, it has to be determined without any presumption, or if there be any presumption involved, it is against jurisdiction, because the court has only a limited and special jurisdiction, and, therefore, so far as presumptions go, it is presumed not to have jurisdiction of the particular case or the particular person. Now, if that philosophy be applied here, there ought to be no presumption in favor of this kind of an inferior court having jurisdiction. Here is a militia court, and not only a militia court, but a militia board. And the question arising as to whether it has jurisdiction of a particular person or of a particular matter, the proposition is to provide by law that jurisdiction shall be presumed. I think, applying the principles that we apply ordinarily in our courts, that this presumption ought not to be indulged here, and certainly it ought not to be enforced by an enactment such as this would propose. It is an inferior tribunal if it is a militia court-martial. It is still more inferior if it is a militia board—some anomalous, indefinite sort of thing, inferior to a court-martial. Now, then, whether it has jurisdiction or not is a question that ought to be determined, subject to review, if that question arises. I do not ask a presumption against its jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction can take care of itself. I think the provision is not in harmony with the general principles governing such matters, and that in some instances it might be dangerous, provided it be valid. If it be not valid, it ought not to be put into the law; and if it be valid and objectionable, for that reason it ought not to be put into the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a division on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 27.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following section 63 insert the following additional sections:

"SEC. 64. That a reserve corps of the National Guard of the District of Columbia is hereby organized, to consist of honorably discharged officers and men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps of the United States, honorably discharged officers and men of the organized militia of any State or Territory who are residents of the District of Columbia, and honorably discharged members of the National Guard of the District of Columbia whose military training and physical condition shall conform to the standard determined by regulations to be promulgated by the President of the United States: Provided, That the term of enlistment in the reserve and the military duties and obligations required of reservists shall be determined by regulations to be promulgated by the President of the United States: Provided further, That when called out for military duty reservists shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and men of like grade on the active list of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this word "reservists." I know not what that means, and I move to strike it out, and insert whatever the committee may suggest.

Mr. AMES. Members of the national guard leaving the service are reservists. They are on the reserve corps.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is the proper term.

Mr. AMES. I do not know of a better term.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I withdraw my amendment. The gentlemen seem to be entirely satisfied with the term, and I would not desire to interfere with them.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution providing for expenses of the House Office Building;

H. R. 17707. An act to authorize William H. Standish to construct a dam across James River, in Stone County, Mo., and divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power; and

H. R. 22879. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908.

HARRIMAN V. THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The Speaker pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 634), which was read, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Harriman v. The Interstate Commerce Commission seems to render advisable further legislation in the way of amendments to the existing law which will confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, so far as the Congress has constitutional power to do so, the authority claimed for it in the case recently decided against it by the Supreme Court. Mr. Justice Day, in delivering the dissenting opinion, concurred in by Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice McKenna, says in part:

"The function of investigation which Congress has conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission is one of great importance, and, while of course it can only be exercised within the constitutional limitations which protect the individual from unreasonable searches and seizures and unconstitutional invasions of liberty, the act should not be construed so narrowly as to defeat its purposes."

Apparently the language of the act is such that there is danger lest the last-mentioned result will unavoidably ensue upon the authoritative construction placed thereon by the Supreme Court, and it is therefore obvious that the Congress should amend the act and change the language so as explicitly to empower the commission to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books and papers relating to any matter under investigation, and this by virtue of the powers conferred upon the said commission by any section of the law under which it is acting, or of any act amendatory thereof, so as to aid it in ascertaining facts upon which it can recommend any additional legislation in reference to the regulation of commerce that it may conceive to be within the power of the Congress to enact.

I further recommend that the commission be explicitly empowered by order to postpone the application of any increase of rates by any railroad pending examination by the said commission into said increase to see whether or not it is justified. The regulation of the railroads should be put as completely as possible in the hands of the commission, for it can only be rendered effective by being put completely under the control of some branch of the National Executive, the action of this branch to take effect immediately.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President (S. Doc. No. 632), which was read and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress, the Fifty-ninth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 5, 1909.

SALARIES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President (S. Doc. No. 638), which was read and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a revised statement, prepared by the Committee on Grades and Salaries under the executive order of June 11, 1907, for the reclassification and readjustment of salaries in the executive departments, and estimates of appropriations based thereon.

The reclassification of employees should be authorized now, even if the additional appropriation suggested can not now be made. The existing classification does not meet the needs of the service. The basis of the reclassification is character of work rather than amount of salary; it would avoid the need of special positions and result in much higher efficiency.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

Mr. FRYE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments, the bill (S. 7992) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908, and I submit a report (No. 713) thereon.

In order to stop unnecessary expenditure of the public money, I shall feel it my duty at the earliest possible moment to call up the bill for consideration. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] does not seem to be present. If he will examine the report which accompanies the bill, he will find, I think, all the facts he desired information in relation to in a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is now present. I made a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations touching the Tokyo exposition, and I think the report contains all the information the Senator from Texas desired in a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I wish he would examine the report, because at the earliest possible moment I desire to call up the bill for consideration in order to stop unnecessary expenditure of the public money.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will be glad to do so at the first opportunity, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORY FUNDS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate bill 6484, to establish postal savings banks, and so forth, which I ask may be read and printed and lie on the table.

The proposed amendment was read and ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCUMBER to the bill (S. 6484) "to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes."

Amend section 11 by striking out all of said section from the beginning thereof down to and including the words "Attorney-General," on page 9 of the bill as reprinted on January 6, 1909, and insert in lieu thereon the following:

"SEC. 11. That the Postmaster-General shall, as herein provided, deposit postal-savings depository funds in such national or state banks in the immediate vicinity of the place where such funds are received, and when possible in the counties in which such funds are received, as will accept such funds and agree to pay for the use thereof 2½ per cent per annum, and give such security for repayment thereof as may be required by the Postmaster-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. MONEY. I send up an order which I ask to have considered now. It is to withdraw certain papers accompanying a former bill for the purpose of preparing a new bill. The bill passed both Houses and was vetoed by the President, under, I think, misinformation.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Francesco Krebs, accompanying Senate bill S. 5531, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

COMMISSIONS TO RETIRED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank.

The amendments were on line 3, after "army," to insert the words "Navy and Marine Corps," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps retired with increased rank."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. FRYE. There is no reason why the revenue-cutter officers should not be included with officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Mr. WARREN. The intention of the proposed law as originally introduced was merely to grant the power to the Executive to issue commissions to such officers of the army as by law received a higher grade upon retirement. The Senator from Maine calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are left out. I think myself, since the House proposed to include officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps, which they had a right to do, and which is entirely satisfactory, we should also include those of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

So I move to amend the amendment of the House by including the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and I ask that the amendment as amended may be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Navy and Marine Corps" insert "and of the Revenue-Cutter Service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, the title was amended so as to read:

An act to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and of the Revenue-Cutter Service, retired with increased rank.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall make some remarks on the latest phases of the Brownsville matter, with the indulgence of the Senate, and I give further notice that at that time I shall move to make the bill I introduced for the relief of the discharged soldiers the unfinished business, and that I shall press it constantly, in season and out, until it is disposed of.

TENNESSEE COAL AND IRON COMPANY.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a resolution, which I will read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate as early as may be practicable whether, in the opinion of the committee, the President was authorized to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel Corporation, as is shown by the message of the President in response to Senate resolution No. 240, this session.

Before I ask its consideration, Mr. President, I wish the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments with reference to the purpose of the resolution.

On January 4 of this year the Senate, on my motion, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate—

First. Whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by him or by his authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it in the year 1907 of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and if no such proceedings have been instituted state the reason for such nonaction.

Second. Whether an opinion was rendered by him or under his authority as to the legality of such absorption, and if so attach a copy, if in writing, and if verbal state the substance of it.

It will be seen that the resolution was addressed to the Attorney-General of the United States and asked, in substance, whether he had proceeded under the Sherman antitrust law against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and if he had not proceeded, to state the reason for his nonaction. He was also directed to inform the Senate whether he had given an opinion as to the legality of this merger and to attach a copy of the opinion if in writing, and if not, to state the substance of it.

The answer is made to the resolution by the President, and not by the Attorney-General, as Senators understand and know from the message read yesterday, and which appears in the RECORD this morning.

With reference to one phase of this response of the President, I will to-day have comparatively little to say—that is, with reference to his protest against the passage of the resolution by the Senate.

The response of the President is a full and complete answer to the resolution of the Senate. It shows that no action has been taken by the Department of Justice, and that none has been taken because the President took the matter in his own hand, as is not infrequently the case.

It shows further that one more arbitrary and lawless act of an important nature has been traced to the Chief Magistrate of the country, who is solemnly obligated by the Constitution not only to obey the law himself, but to take care that it is faithfully executed by others.

It is true he protests that the Senate has no right to direct the head of a department by a resolution of inquiry or to seek the reason for a course pursued by the head of any of the departments.

That should surprise nobody, Mr. President. It is characteristic of the distinguished occupant of the White House. It is but a natural and logical corollary of the main dogma of his message, that he is absolved from any legal restraint whatever.

I have already stated that upon that proposition at this time I shall have very little to say; and I will content myself for the present with reading from the opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, in the sixth volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States, a paragraph to which I invite the especial attention of Senators:

Upon the whole, then, heads of departments have a threefold relation, namely: 1. To the President, whose political or confidential ministers they are, to execute his will, or rather to act in his name and by his constitutional authority, in cases in which the President possesses a constitutional or legal discretion. 2. To the law; for where the law has directed them to perform certain acts, and where rights of individuals are dependent on those acts, then, in such cases a head of department is an officer of the law, and amenable to the laws for his conduct. (Marbury v. Madison, I Cranch, 49–61.) And 3. To Congress, in the conditions contemplated by the Constitution.

This latter relation, that of the departments to Congress, is one of the great elements of responsibility and legality in their action. They are created by law; most of their duties are prescribed by law; Congress may at all times call on them for information or explanation in matters of official duty, and it may, if it sees fit, interpose by legislation concerning them, when required by the interests of the Government.

But, Mr. President, however important may be the question to which I am at this time adverting, I do not intend this morning to be diverted from the proposition that the President of the United States has permitted by his positive and affirmative action a violation of the law of the United States. Senators will remember that in the fall of 1907 there was frequent talk that the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company had been merged into the United States Steel Corporation. Later, the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] referred to it in a speech in this body. But no direct information upon the subject was then obtained. In a published letter by the Attorney-General of the United States, dated Washington, October 13, 1908, this language is used by him:

My department has administered these laws as it found them, in their letter and in their spirit; when you say it "acquiesced" last year in some action taken by the steel "trust" "in the teeth of the law" you speak without knowledge. I do not know, and during my term of office have never known, of any such action by the corporation or cluster of corporations to which you refer; and as I did not and do not know of it, I could not and did not "acquiesce" in it. If you or anybody else will show me now legal proof establishing that the steel trust or anybody else has committed a crime under the Sherman law, or any other federal statute, I will do all I can to bring the culprit to justice.

And yet, Mr. President, according to the message of the President of the United States, read here yesterday, the Attorney-General had received from the President himself a letter dated November 4, 1907, in which he told him that it was contemplated to merge the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company into the United States Steel Corporation, and that, so far as he was concerned, he did not see fit to interfere with such action on the part of these corporations. The President stated fully, in the letter, his reasons for that course.

That is not all, Mr. President. At the very time the President wrote this letter to the Attorney-General that official had already filed in the United States circuit court for the southern district of the State of New York, through special assistants, a petition asking a dissolution of the tobacco trust on the ground that it had absorbed some of its rivals in the business, and, in effect, that it did not matter how many corporations had been absorbed or how much business was being done by the corporations absorbed by the Tobacco Company.

Not only that, sir, but the President had directed the Attorney-General to institute that proceeding against the tobacco trust based upon the ground that it was absorbing corporations engaged in the business and that the absorption amounted to a destruction of competition.

Now, if I may refer in support of this to the correspondence, quite voluminous on the part of the President last fall, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the President himself in a letter to a distinguished citizen of Nebraska stated that his administration ought to have credit for the institution of the suit against the Tobacco Company. Let us see further about that. Here is a copy of the brief of the United States in the tobacco case, and here is what the Attorney-General says in his brief, filed in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York in that case:

Again, all the authorities agree that, in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

That is the broad proposition of law laid down by the Attorney-General, Mr. President, and I take it to be correct. Now, what does he say in his brief the Tobacco Company was doing to bring it within the prohibition of that general proposition of law?

With expanding purpose to dominate the tobacco industry, they have progressively absorbed competitors in interstate and foreign commerce, taking from the active parties agreements to refrain from engaging therein.

At another place in the brief the following is said:

After the foregoing general recitals the petition states with particularity the steps by which the purpose has been carried out and shows results accomplished.

From 1891 to 1898, inclusive, the American Tobacco Company purchased property, plants, businesses, and good will of many competing concerns located in different States engaged in commerce as purchasers, manufacturers, sellers, and distributors of tobacco leaf and its products, taking from the owners, stockholders, and others stipulations not to engage for periods varying from ten to twenty years in such businesses.

That brief was filed in May, 1908, by special counsel, under direction of the Attorney-General, who took the broad ground that absorption by the tobacco company of competing companies not amounting to the creation of a monopoly was a violation of the act of 1890 and the provisions of the Wilson law and the Dingley law on the same subject.

That case was presented to four circuit judges, and the Attorney-General considered it so important to have an early decision that he certified to the court its importance and asked that it be heard by the circuit judges. And it was heard, instead of by one, by four circuit judges of the United States—Judges Lacombe, Coxe, Noyes, and Ward. Here is the decision. The substance of what I want to call to the attention of the Senate is embodied in the opinion of Judge Lacombe, agreed to by all the other judges except Judge Ward.

I will read, Mr. President, for the benefit of the Senate, two or three extracts from this opinion showing that under the law, as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the circuit judges in New York, it is not a question of whether the absorbing company produces 60 per cent of the output of any commodity, as suggested by the President in his letter to the Attorney-General, in which he refers to Messrs. Gary and Frick. It is not a question of the size of the corporation absorbed, nor the amount of its business; not at all. But if one corporation absorbs any other corporation engaged in the same business it is a violation of the act of Congress, and the people are entitled to have the action restrained.

I do not know whether many Senators have read this opinion, and consequently, Mr. President, as I have already indicated, I will read two or three extracts. This opinion was delivered on the 7th of November, 1908. It was delivered, it is presumed, in pursuance of the argument made by the Attorney-General, who, the President says, gave him an oral opinion in 1907 that it was not a violation of the law for the steel trust to do the thing which in his brief he said it was a violation of the law for the tobacco trust to do.

Let me read from the opinion:

Disregarding various dicta and following the several propositions which have been approved by successive majorities of the Supreme Court, this language is to be construed as prohibiting any contract or combination whose direct effect is to prevent the free play of competition, and thus tend to deprive the country of the services of any number of independent dealers, however small.

Again, Mr. President—

The act as above construed prohibits every contract or combination in restraint of competition. Size is not made the test. Two individuals who have been driving rival express wagons between villages in two contiguous States, who enter into a combination to join forces and operate a single line, restrain an existing competition, and it would seem to make little difference whether they make such combination more effective by forming a partnership or not.

The President, in his letter to the Attorney-General referring to Messrs. Gary and Frick, suggests that the public has not been injured, and that therefore this absorption was permitted and acquiesced in by him. Judge Lacombe says:

During the existence of the American Tobacco Company new enterprises have been started—some with small capital—in competition with it, and have thriven. The price of leaf tobacco—the raw material—except for one brief period of abnormal conditions, has steadily increased until it has nearly doubled, while at the same time 150,000 additional acres have been devoted to tobacco crops and the consumption of the leaf has greatly increased. Through the enterprise of defendant and at large expense new markets for American tobacco have been opened or developed in India, China, and elsewhere. But all this is immaterial; each one of these purchases of existing concerns complained of in the petition was a contract and combination in restraint of a competition existing when it was entered into, and that is sufficient to bring it within the ban of this drastic statute.

So, Mr. President, we have this character of case presented to us: The administration instructs the Attorney-General to proceed against the tobacco trust because it had absorbed rival corporations, setting up substantially that it did not matter whether they were extensive or were conducting an inappreciable business, and at about the same time expressly authorizes the steel trust, for some reason unknown to me and upon which I will not at this time speculate, to absorb its principal competitor in the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. It seems to me that in that statement the Senator is doing the President an injustice. The message we have before us does not, in my judgment, bear out the construction the Senator from Texas puts upon it. The letter the President embodied in his report to the Senate says that the proposition was submitted to him that a financial crisis existed in the city of New York; that the securities of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company were held by a firm that was about to fail, and that unless this stock was taken over it would precipitate financial trouble, the end of which nobody could see at that time. Now, under those conditions the President says:

I felt it no public duty of mine to interpose any objection.

He does not say that he approved of it. He remained noncommittal, as he says. It seems to me that under those conditions the President is not subject to the criticism the Senator from Texas is indulging in.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the language of the President in his message at the top of page 544.

As to the transaction in question, I was personally cognizant of and responsible for its every detail.

The President did not only acquiesce in it, but he declares that he was cognizant of and responsible for its every detail.

Mr. HOPKINS. That statement of the President, in my judgment, does not relate to the point the Senator is now discussing. In order to get at the position of the President, it is necessary to consider the letter to the Attorney-General under date of November 4, 1907, in which he informs the Attorney-General that a crisis is impending and that the facts have been brought to him by the two gentlemen named in the letter. Then, under those conditions, he says:

I felt it no public duty of mine to interpose any objection.

But he does state that he was noncommittal upon the subject. He neither affirmed nor denied; he neither encouraged nor dissuaded them from taking action. That was the position of the President. They acted on their own initiative. That is the point I am making with the Senator—that he is doing the President an injustice when he says that the President approved of the action of these people.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the substance of the statement of the Senator from Illinois, as I understand, is that the President merely acquiesced. The President, however, in his message to the Senate, long after the letter to which the Senator refers, states that he was "cognizant of and responsible for" the entire transaction.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I do not care. The Senator can take either phase of the proposition; he may say that the President directed the Attorney-General to allow this, or he may say that the President sat quietly and saw the law violated, although the Constitution says that he will take care to see that the laws are faithfully executed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. CULBERSON. Wait until I get through with one other proposition.

The Senator has referred to the letter of the President about the panic. In order to refresh the recollection of the Senator I desire to read a short extract from a speech made in this Chamber by a Senator to whom we all look on account of his courage, his intelligence, and his sturdy manhood, a man who never speaks upon any question unless he is advised of the facts. The speech was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on the 26th of February, 1908, and, as the extract is short, I will read it myself.

It appears that in the midst of the panic it was found that certain banks and trust companies carried stock of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company. They had made loans on it. Those institutions in some way were pressed; they were badly crowded and they held that stock.

I remember reading in the papers at the time that there was a meeting in the house of a prominent banker in New York, an all-night meeting, in which the question was up of relieving the monetary stringency, and it was said that at that meeting plans were adopted that would relieve the acuteness of the tension and stringency. But what was the result of that all-night meeting? The result of it was this: The next morning the people who held the stocks of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company were given the blessed privilege of exchanging it for the 5 per cent bonds of the steel trust.

In other words, the Steel trust was to relieve the financial stringency by exchanging its 5 per cent bonds for the stock of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and in that way the Steel trust succeeded in absorbing its only rival and competitor of any consequence. No cash passed in the transaction, and yet it was supposed to relieve the currency famine.

If they had taken that stock and paid cash for it, I can see how they might have helped the poor banks that held the stock and given them a supply of cash. They compelled the banks to exchange that stock and take the bonds of the steel trust, the 5 per cent bonds; and of course those bonds could only bring cash to the parties who thus obtained them by a sale on the New York Stock Exchange. That was the way the financial stringency was relieved in that instance. I remember reading about that incident. I was here in the city at the time. I remember that a couple of gentlemen connected with the steel trust came down here from New York at that time to bushwhack around—

I suppose the Senator would be glad to withdraw that remark now since they visited the White House and made the agreement direct—

I remember that a couple of gentlemen connected with the steel trust came down here from New York at that time to bushwack around and ascertain whether that merger would stand and would be let alone.

I think they went away satisfied. I refer to this as an incident showing how the financial stringency was relieved on this occasion, and how much credit certain men assumed for relieving the financial stringency in that way.

Mr. President, in an issue of this kind between the Senator from Minnesota and the President of the United States, I stand with the Senator. I believe he is borne out by contemporaneous history. But whether he is or not, what warrant is there in law or in conscience for an officer of the United States to permit a statute to be violated openly and plainly to accomplish anything, whether it be to relieve a financial stringency or what not?

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the resolution lie over.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution be read. It has not, I think, been read from the desk. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 243), submitted by Mr. CULBERSON, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, as early as may be practicable, whether, in the opinion of the committee, the President was authorized to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel Corporation, as is shown by the message of the President in response to Senate resolution No. 240, this session.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the resolution lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President of the United States which was received on yesterday in response to the resolution of the Senate be appended to my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the message of the President of the United States be appended to his remarks. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message is as follows:

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General to the President and from the President to the Attorney-General relative to the institution of legal proceedings against the United States Steel Corporation.

To the Senate:

In connection with the following resolution of the Senate, passed January 4, 1909—

"Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate—

"1. Whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by him or by his authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it in the year 1907 of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and if no such proceedings have been instituted state the reason for such nonaction.

"2. Whether an opinion was rendered by him or under his authority as to the legality of such absorption, and if so, attach a copy if in writing, and if verbal state the substance of it."

I transmit herewith the following letter from the Attorney-General:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, January 6, 1909.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions, I have the honor to inclose you a certified copy of the resolution adopted by the Senate, wherein I am directed to inform the Senate whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by me or by my authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it, in the year 1907, of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company. As you are aware, no such proceedings have been instituted.

I remain,

Yours, most respectfully and truly,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

As to the transaction in question, I was personally cognizant of and responsible for its every detail. For the information of the Senate I transmit a copy of a letter sent by me to the Attorney-General on November 4, 1907, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 4, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL: Judge E. H. Gary and Mr. H. C. Frick, on behalf of the steel corporation, have just called upon me. They state that there is a certain business firm (the name of which I have not been told, but which is of real importance in New York business circles) which will undoubtedly fail this week if help is not given. Among its assets are a majority of the securities of the Tennessee Coal Company. Application has been urgently made to the steel corporation to purchase this stock as the only means of avoiding a failure. Judge Gary and Mr. Frick inform me that as a mere business transaction they do not care to purchase the stock; that under ordinary circumstances they would not consider purchasing the stock because but little benefit will come to the steel corporation from the purchase; that they are aware that the purchase will be used as a handle for attack upon them on the ground that they are striving to secure a monopoly of the business and prevent competition—not that this would represent what could honestly be said, but what might recklessly and untruthfully be said.

They further inform me that as a matter of fact the policy of the company has been to decline to acquire more than 60 per cent of the steel properties, and that this purpose has been persevered in for several years past, with the object of preventing these accusations, and as a matter of fact their proportion of steel properties has slightly decreased, so that it is below this 60 per cent, and the acquisition of the property in question will not raise it above 60 per cent. But they feel that it is immensely to their interest, as to the interest of every responsible business man, to try to prevent a panic and general industrial smash-up at this time, and that they are willing to go into this transaction, which they would not otherwise go into, because it seems the opinion of those best fitted to express judgment in New York that it will be an important factor in preventing a break that might be ruinous; and that this has been urged upon them by the combination of the most responsible bankers in New York who are now thus engaged in endeavoring to save the situation. But they asserted they did not wish to do this if I stated that it ought not to be done. I answered that while of course I could not advise them to take the action proposed, I felt it no public duty of mine to interpose any objection.

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

After sending this letter I was advised orally by the Attorney-General that, in his opinion, no sufficient ground existed for legal proceedings against the steel corporation, and that the situation had been in no way changed by its acquisition of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company.

I have thus given to the Senate all the information in the possession of the Executive Department which appears to me to be material or relevant on the subject of the resolution. I feel bound, however, to add that I have instructed the Attorney-General not to respond to that portion of the resolution which calls for a statement of his reasons for nonaction. I have done so because I do not conceive it to be within the authority of the Senate to give directions of this character to the head of an executive department or demand from him reasons for his action. Heads of the executive departments are subject to the Constitution, and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk (H. R. 21458), authorizing sales of land within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation to the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum and to the University of Idaho.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, and that the same be considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the State of Idaho, for the use of the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum, land not to exceed in area four sections, to be selected by the governor of the State, within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said State to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price per acre as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the regents of the University of the State of Idaho, for the use of said university, land not to exceed 640 acres in area, to be selected by the said regents of the said university within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said regents to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price per acre as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

Mr. FRENCH. There are three proposed amendments to the bill.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 11, insert after the word "Interior" the words "but which shall not be less than $2.50 per acre."

On page 2, line 4, insert after the word "Interior" the words "but which shall not be less than $2.50 per acre."

Line 10, page 2, strike out the words "per acre."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman, first, as to the amendments he proposes to offer. Do these amendments come from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. FRENCH. The bill is from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the amendments have the approval of the chairman of the committee, together with that of the ranking member on the Democratic side. All that the amendment does is to provide a minimum price, below which the land may not be sold. That was the objection raised a couple of days ago when I asked unanimous consent, and this meets with the approval of the Members who raised that objection, as well as the approval of the chairman of the committee and the leader of the Democratic side upon the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I wanted to find out was whether the amendment was the gentleman's own amendment or whether it came from the committee.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, it is my own amendment, with that indorsement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The members of the committee have been informed and consent to it?

Mr. FRENCH. The chairman of the committee, together with the leader of the minority side upon the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SALE OF ISOLATED TRACTS OF LAND ON NEZ PERCÉ INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the following bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and that it be considered in the House with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the following bill, with amendments, which the Clerk will report, and that the same be considered in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19095) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell isolated tracts of land within the Nez Percé Indian Reservation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell at public auction any isolated and unappropriated public lands embraced within the Nez Perce Indian Reservation in the same manner as isolated tracts within the public domain are sold under the general law providing for the sale of isolated tracts: Provided, That for agricultural lands purchasers under this act shall pay not less than $3.75 per acre, and for lands valuable for stone and timber they shall pay not less than $5 per acre.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and the words "the sale of isolated tracts," of line 8, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the law providing for the sale of any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain is hereby extended and made applicable to any isolated and unappropriated public lands embraced within the Nez Perces Indian Reservation."

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if those are the amendments agreed upon yesterday?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the amendment in any way affect the minimum price provided for in the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at all.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman state how much land this bill covers?

Mr. FRENCH. That is hard to get at. There are a few patches here and there. They could be acquired under the homestead law without the payment of a cent. This land has no considerable value, and it is to enable the department to dispose of the land for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. WALDO. Can not the gentleman give the House some idea of the amount of land to be disposed of?

Mr. FRENCH. We have a general isolated land-tract law applying to all the public lands of the United States. This simply extends the provisions of that law to this reservation, the same as the provision has been made in all of the recent bills opening reservations. The law opening the Nez Perces Reservation was passed fourteen or eighteen years ago, and at that time no provision was made whereby isolated tracts could be disposed of. We want the same law to apply to this as applies to all the other public domain of the United States. There is a minimum number of acres that may be acquired by each individual; it can not exceed 160 acres.

Mr. WALDO. I understand that part of it, but I have failed yet to get an answer to my question whether the gentleman has any idea of how much land he is trying to dispose of.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no definite information upon that point.

Mr. WALDO. Whether it is 100 acres or 1,000,000 acres or 1,000 acres?

Mr. FRENCH. Only a small area. I do not know exactly. The department approves of this bill. There is a general law, as I have stated, providing for the disposition of isolated tracts, which applies to all public lands in the United States. Similar provision has been included in all recent laws opening Indian reservations. That provision was omitted when this bill was passed fourteen or fifteen years ago. We simply want the same law extended to this reservation, with the exception that the committee insist on having a larger minimum price than that which prevailed elsewhere, because the bill as first passed contained a larger minimum price, and it is to meet that.

Mr. WALDO. It seems to me that the gentleman ought to be able to inform the House how much land he is trying to dispose of, or, at least, to give some idea of it.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not see how that bears upon the question, because the isolated land-tract law applies to the entire domain of the United States.

Mr. WALDO. But not to this particular tract?

Mr. FRENCH. No; because it is not regarded as public domain.

Mr. WALDO. It seems to me that before disposing of this land in this reservation we ought to know how much we are trying to dispose of.

Mr. FRENCH. The land within the reservation is practically entirely settled now. There are a few little corners here and there that could be acquired to-day under the homestead law without the payment of a single cent, yet they remain untaken, Because of the fact that the Government can not dispose of these lands, this bill was introduced to try to sell them for not less than $3.75 per acre. The money goes into the Public Treasury.

Mr. WALDO. Can the gentleman inform us whether it is asked for by the department, or some one who desires to acquire all of these tracts?

Mr. FRENCH. The department approves of the legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that all the recent Indian treaties contain a provision which allows just such a sale as this to dispose of these remaining lands after a certain number of years? Since the Government changed its policy in regard to the Indian lands whereby they no longer become the purchaser of the land, but become the agent of the Indians for their sale, it is necessary, if the Indians are to be paid for the odd pieces of not valuable lands remaining after the homesteader takes all he wants, that there shall be some provision whereby the remaining tracts shall be sold. This bill applies to the isolated-tracts law to this reservation as it applies to the same conditions elsewhere on the public domain.

Mr. WALDO. Can the gentleman inform us whether this land now belongs to the Government or to the Indians?

Mr. FRENCH. Why, the land belongs to the Government; yes.

Mr. WALDO. And it is the understanding of the gentleman that the department, in addition to the gentleman's friends who desire to get this land, advise the sale of it.

Mr. FRENCH. The department approves of it in their report, which I have here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this the same bill that the gentleman had up yesterday?

Mr. FRENCH. It is the same bill, with the modification that was made, to meet the objection raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The same changes suggested are now in the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. It contains the exact modification; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended so as to read "Nez Perces."

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the two foregoing bills were passed was laid on the table.

DETAIL OF RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged House resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 468.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to inform the House of Representatives what efforts have been made to carry out the present law looking to the detail of retired officers on certain duties now performed by officers detached from their proper commands or duties in line or staff.

And the Secretary of War is further requested to report the number and grades of officers taken from the active list who are now on duties which, under existing law, could be performed by capable and experienced officers if detailed from the retired list, thereby insuring the return of such active officers to their proper commands or duties.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reports the resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do. Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply calls on the Secretary of War for information as to the service now being done by officers of the active list of the army detailed to work not properly in the line of the military vocation. It also asks the Secretary of War to supply the House with a list of the number and grades of officers that are taken from the active list and now on duty which, under the existing law, may be performed by capable and experienced officers on the retired list, and the purpose of it is to see if it be not possible to meet the shortage of active officers in regular military work by detailing, as the law provides, certain officers on the retired list to do that work. The committee passed the resolution unanimously and authorized me to have it called up. If the information to be sent to the House by the Secretary of War is such as I have reason to believe it will be, I think it will obviate the necessity for a large increase in the number of officers on the active list which is being asked for by the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 25392, making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between the majority and the minority of the House, the time of the minority to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], the ranking member of the minority subcommittee, and the time on the majority side to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between the two sides of the House, to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know how much time it is proposed to occupy in general debate.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the time is a little indefinite. There are three or more hours asked for at this moment, and other gentlemen desire to be heard, I am told.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. How much time can the gentleman give me?

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Michigan does not ask for any limitation of time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I would like to have half an hour.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to postpone a statement with regard to the bill until just before it is taken up under the five-minute rule—in other words, after the close of general debate. It had been my purpose to call upon the present occupant of the chair to occupy time. Time is now allowed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] of one hour, or such other time as he may choose to occupy.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, in no parliamentary body on earth is there allowed greater latitude and freedom in debate than in our Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. We are permitted to speak upon any and every possible subject. Therefore I may wander from the subject-matter of the pending bill and discuss, to some extent, the rules of this House.

When a Congressman fails to secure the passage of a bill in which some or all of his people are interested he is very apt to go home and say that he could not catch the elusive eye of the Speaker, or that the Committee on Rules sat down upon him, or that by the rules of the House he was so cribbed, cabined, and confined that he could accomplish nothing. As many thousands of bills fall every year without discussion or consideration, these reiterated excuses have had a wide effect, and there has come about a great deal of criticism of the Speaker and the Committee on Rules, but more particularly of the rules themselves—not any particular rule, but just "the rules." They have come to be looked upon by a good many people outside of Congress as framed for the express purpose of preventing legislation and preventing the discussion of proposed legislation. There may be also some gentlemen upon this floor who feel that in some way they are being deprived of some of their rights.

Our present rules are substantially the same as those of the Fifty-first Congress, presided over by Thomas B. Reed. In discussing the question of their readoption by the present Congress when it organized on the 2d day of December, 1907, a very distinguished Democrat is recorded, upon page 8 of the RECORD, as having said:

> We shall hope that the time is not far distant when those who are chosen to represent free men in the greatest legislative body, as we frequently hear, upon the face of the earth shall stand forth in the glory of a noble trust, possessed of the powers of the real Representative, not by permission of anybody, responsible alone to his God above him and his constituents behind him.

Then a little later, upon the 24th of January, 1908, another gentleman upon that side of the House, from the same State, said:

> This is not the place for a lock-step march. It is the place where every man ought to be permitted to express the sentiments of his own people as he understands them, responsible only to the God who observes what he does and to the people who gave him their support.

In the course of the same speech he also said:

> Give these Representatives their rights upon this floor. Let every man have the privilege to rise in his place and present what he chooses for the consideration of this House, and then let that matter be disposed by a free and untrammeled expression of the representatives of the people.

The same gentleman had previously said, on the 5th of March, 1906:

> Every Member of this House who was elected to come here should be allowed to raise his voice and cast his vote in behalf of those measures his people are interested in.

On the 5th of February, 1908, a Member upon this side of the Chamber said, as reported at page 1650 of the RECORD:

> The adoption of the rules places manacles upon the legislative hands of the Member, places a gag upon his tongue and clamps upon his brain for all the purposes of vital legislation in the interest of the people.

Upon that occasion he expended just fifty minutes in fluent speech and graceful oratory in his endeavor to convince us that he had a gag upon his tongue as well as the manacles and clamps referred to. [Laughter.]

Then next we had Mr. Bryan's national convention at Denver, on the 18th of July last, unanimously adopting as one of the planks of his platform the following:

> The House of Representatives, as controlled in recent years by the Republican party, has ceased to be a deliberative and executive body, but has come under the absolute domination of the Speaker, who has entire control of its deliberations and powers of legislation.
> We demand that the House of Representatives shall again become a deliberative body, controlled by a majority of the people's representatives and not by the Speaker, and we pledge ourselves to adopt such rules and regulations to govern the House of Representatives as will enable a majority of its Members to dictate its deliberations and control legislation.

But the latest, the most unexpected, and perhaps the most serious attack upon the rules of this House was made by a gentleman whose service here began with my own. In the first year we served upon the same committee, and have been very good friends ever since. In fact, everybody here is his friend. I refer, of course, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], who only a few days ago, upon the 15th of last month, said:

> I want to say, gentlemen, I have been a kicker for twelve years, and if I should stay in this Congress until I arrive at the age of 144 years, I would kick against the rules of this or any House that suppress free speech.

[Laughter.]

This is "the most unkindest cut of all," coming, as it does, from a gentleman who, in the first session of the present Congress, delivered no less than 209 speeches, covering the widest possible range of topics, from the Kongo Free State to the postal service on Mount Eagle, Tenn.; from clean money to campaign contributions; from fish culture to ship subsidy; from wood pulp to the Ladies' Hermitage Association; from tariff revision to the prevention of tuberculosis; from fierce and warlike denunciation of the tobacco trust to the tender memories which cluster about the mistletoe bough, in whose defense against the onslaughts of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] he even quoted poetry. [Laughter.] My distinguished and handsome friend not only made 209 speeches himself, but he assisted nearly every other Member in making his.

Having so often overwhelmed us with the whirlwind of his eloquence and his emotions; so often instructed, enlightened, and charmed us; so often intoxicated us by the exuberance of his entrancing and epidictic oratory, he is a living illustration of the fact that free speech is not entirely suppressed—not entirely.

Referring to the Democratic platform, I venture to assert that the present rules do "enable a majority of its Members to dictate its deliberations and control legislation" to a vastly greater extent than any other body of rules ever in force in this House. In the adoption of the so-called Reed rules, which now obtain, the changes from former rules were made with the declared intention of preventing a minority, frequently a very small one, from controlling the time of the House and preventing the transaction of business. They were made for the express purpose of enabling the majority to dictate its deliberations and control legislation. They were adopted in 1890 in the Fifty-first Congress, presided over by Thomas B. Reed. That Congress made, however, only four material changes in the rules as they had previously existed. But those changes were very important.

That some who were not present in those days and have not stopped to look up the history and reason for the changes then made may the more readily understand their necessity, I shall call attention to a few illuminative public statements. For instance, an editorial in the New York Times, published during the last session of the Democratic Fiftieth Congress, contained this language:

> By a gradual process of evolution, the theory that the rules may be properly overturned in the defense of political minority has developed into a doctrine that any minority, however small, on any question pending or likely to come up, may put a stop to all business until a contract is entered into by the majority, or by the Speaker, that some measure of business will not be considered. This is filibustering run mad. The idea that all public business may be stopped because at some future, undefined time the majority of the House may pass a bill which is opposed by a few Members, revolutionizes all theories of the (one line of copy illegible). It places the power of the legislative branch of the Government in the discretion of one man. It offers a bribe to corruption. It is a premium upon indolence and stupidity. A bribe taker may effectively stand in the way of all legislation until he kills the bill which he is paid to oppose. A lazy or stupid Member may defeat a measure by brute force, simply because he is unable to conduct an honest and intelligent opposition when the measure is under consideration.

On the first Monday of this month it was expected that the public business in Congress would proceed. It was the day on which motions by individual Members to suspend the rules are in order. The proceeding, however, follows the call of States for the introduction of bills. Some weeks since an effort was made to do away with the call of States on Mondays, when motions to suspend the rules are in order. The Committee on Rules reported a resolution to that effect, but the filibusters resorted to dilatory tactics and defeated the attempt. It was the failure of this rule that made it possible for a minority of five to waste a day on which much of importance might have been accomplished. * * *

Five men controlled the House and prevented legislation which two-thirds of the members favored. Never before had the art of obstruction reached such perfection. Government by the minority was in the ascendant, and the minority was so small that the next step in the evolution of Mr. Randall's theory is irresistible. Unless the evil which prevailed on the first Monday of February is cured, the time is soon coming when all legislation in the House of Representatives must be by unanimous consent, which is possible only in the case of unimportant bills or of universal log-rolling schemes.

That is the kind of "deliberative body" which the Denver platform demands that the House shall "again become." Here is a sample of that kind of deliberation, from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 9, 1889:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 9, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. Milburn, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Clause 1 of Rule I provides that—

"The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the Members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same."

I make the point of order that the Journal can not be read until it is ascertained that a quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. That point of order was made during the last session of Congress and the Chair sustained it. It is not only a rule of the House, but the Constitution itself provides that it shall require a majority of the Members-elect to transact business; and the reading and approval of the Journal is the transaction of business, because the Journal is nothing more than memoranda made by an officer of the House, until it is approved by the House.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members answered to their names:

(Here follows the list of names, which it took forty-five minutes to call.)

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and three gentlemen are present, and there is a quorum.

Mr. WEAVER. I move the House adjourn; and pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be until Friday next.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the roll call, as directed by the Speaker, was for the purpose of knowing whether there was a quorum present, and when the Speaker found a quorum present the next requirement is that the Journal be read.

The SPEAKER. The requirement is, the Speaker shall direct that the Journal be read. The Chair thinks the House may adjourn to prevent the reading of the Journal at any time it thinks proper. Such motions have been made before, and the House has adjourned without the reading of the Journal.

The question was taken on adjournment until Friday; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 139.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The Chair appointed Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP as tellers.

Mr. JACKSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRISP (to Mr. JACKSON). Do not do that; we will get a quorum presently.

Mr. JACKSON. I will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

After some time spent in counting, the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 139.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

The tellers continued the count, and finally reported—ayes none, noes 163.

So the motion that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next was disagreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 115.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 106.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know whether during the attempt to obtain a quorum it would be in order for Mr. CRISP to address the House on the rights of a minority being protected under our form of government. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It would not.

The tellers again reported—aye 1, noes 163; so the motion to adjourn till Saturday was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that when the House adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CRISP. I make the point of order that that is more than three days.

The SPEAKER. It is four days.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I move that the House take a recess until half past 2 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 153.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 90.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] whether there is anything else that can be done to protect the rights of the minority. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has said nothing to indicate that he was at all objecting to this.

Mr. PAYSON. How does the minority feel about it?

Mr. ROGERS. There is no minority.

Mr. WEAVER. This is a fight for the rights of the majority.

Mr. PAYSON. I think we ought to be advised as to how "the minority" himself [Mr. WEAVER] feels as to his own situation. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

It also announced disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. Sherman, Mr. Edmunds, and Mr. Morgan.

It further announced the adoption of a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for printing the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1887.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Upon the pending question, the tellers report—ayes 2, noes 161. The noes have it and the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 81.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes none, noes 117.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HATCH]. No quorum has voted. There is evidently a quorum present in the House, and the Chair hopes members will come forward and vote.

Mr. STEELE (at half past 1 o'clock p. m.). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the time named in the pending motion to take a recess has arrived, and that the motion therefore falls, and I now call up the bill (S. 944) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth Scott.

Mr. WEAVER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that the House is dividing and no quorum has voted.

Mr. STEELE. But the time during which it was proposed that the House should take a recess has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is under consideration, and it is for the House to determine. The Chair will again remind members that no quorum has voted. There is obviously a quorum present and the Chair hopes that gentlemen will come forward and vote and make a quorum.

Mr. STEELE. But the hour to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] moved to take a recess having expired is it not in order to make that point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter for the House to determine. The Chair will state to the gentleman [Mr. STEELE] further that even if that question were determined his motion would not be in order, because the Journal of yesterday's proceedings has not yet been read. No motion is in order until after the Journal has been read.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to discuss that point of order, but I yield now to my friend from Michigan [Mr. BREWER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WHITE of New York. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to inquire if protection to the rights of the minority is the palladium of our liberties to-day? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry. If members who are present desire that the business of the House shall proceed they will come forward and vote and make a quorum. It is for them to determine whether the business of the House shall be blocked in this way or not.

The tellers reported—ayes none, noes 152.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. MCCREARY. I move a call of the House.

Mr. MCCULLOGH. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCULLOGH. When a motion is made, and upon a vote the ayes are none, does not the motion fail?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not unless there is a quorum. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] insists upon the point that no quorum has voted. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] that a call of the House be ordered.

A call of the House was ordered—ayes 73, noes 5.

The roll was called, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

(Here follows the list of names again, the calling of which took another forty-five minutes.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The roll call discloses the presence of 232 Members, being more than a quorum.

Mr. MCCREARY. As a quorum is present, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion of Mr. MCCREARY was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until forty minutes after 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is already a motion pending which must be determined. The tellers will resume their places. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I make a point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order which the Chair understands the gentleman desires to make has already been overruled. This is a question which must be determined by the House.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it is now 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter for the House. The motion having been made must be voted upon. The House is dividing on the question.

Mr. WEAVER. I make the point that the vote must now be taken de novo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the pending motion is that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It now being half an hour past that time, what would be the effect of this motion if adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will determine that when the House votes upon the proposition.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But my point is this: If the motion were adopted, would it not throw us over until half past 1 o'clock to-morrow? I ask the question in good faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that such would not be the effect.

The House again divided; and after some time the tellers reported—ayes 1, noes 162.

So the motion of Mr. Weaver was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes past 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 3, noes 34.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum.

Mr. CRISP. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 48 voting therefor.

So the question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 184, not voting 136, as follows:

(Here follows the list of names again, another forty-five minutes having been consumed in calling them.)

So the House refused to take a recess.

During the roll call,

Mr. Crisp moved that the second reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. Weaver objected.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice, on all political questions:

* * * * * * *

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no objection to the Journal being read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

A quorum was present all the time, but enough Members, by refusing to answer to their names, made it possible that two men could, and did, hold up the entire House for more than three hours before they would permit even the reading of the Journal of the previous day's proceedings. It was after 3 o'clock before there could be had a final vote upon a motion to take a recess until half past 1. [Laughter.] And yet it is demanded that the House "again become a deliberative body" of that kind.

A majority of Republicans had been elected to the Fifty-first Congress, which was about to assemble in December, 1889. On the 7th of October in that year the following appeared in the Washington correspondence of the New York Sun:

CONGRESSMAN MILLS ON THE SITUATION—A WISE, SAFE, AND TRULY DEMOCRATIC PROGRAMME ANNOUNCED BY THE TEXAS STATESMAN.

WASHINGTON, October 6.

Hon. Roger Q. Mills, of Texas, is in the city. It is the first time that Mr. Mills has been here since the adjournment of Congress. He is looking well and claims to be cheerful. While Mr. Mills will not be the leader of the Democratic side during the coming session, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will surely be heard from.

In conversation to-day, Mr. Mills said that though in the minority the Democrats were fully conscious of their power, and would use it. "We do not propose," said he, "that the Republican majority shall pass a single measure without our consent * * *. In other words, we propose to exercise the control of the House just as much as though we were still in the majority, because we know our minority is strong enough to make us the virtual rulers.

Whether or not Mr. Mills uttered those words, he and others certainly endeavored to carry out that programme. They were defeated by changing the rules so as to give the majority control.

Under the old rules it frequently happened that more time was taken up with roll calls than with debate; more by dilatory motions than in the transaction of the public business. One hundred or more gentlemen might be present, some or all making motions to adjourn, points of no quorum, calls for the yeas and nays, etc., and yet when the roll was called, refusing to answer, they were treated as not present. Though actually present, they were constructively absent, and a full quorum had to be obtained without them, although they sat there in their seats.

It was stated in debate, and not denied, that in the Fiftieth Congress one Member, Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, had for three days, under the rules of the House, stood out against 324 Representatives, and virtually said to them that they should not enact any matter of legislation unless they first agreed with him that a certain bill in which he was interested should be considered. Upon one occasion business had been delayed by alternating 128 times the motions to adjourn and to adjourn to a certain time. Conditions had become absolutely intolerable. Therefore it was that in the Republican Fifty-first Congress the House made certain amendments. The substantial and important changes made in the rules at that time were:

First. The prevention of dilatory motions.

Second. Counting of quorum.

Third. Making 100 a quorum in Committee of the Whole.

Fourth. Daily order of business under Rule XXIV.

The rule as then made, and now existing, is that "no dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker." It was, and is, also distinctly provided that Members present but not voting shall nevertheless be counted in making up the constitutional quorum. These two changes were looked upon by the Democrats of that day as tyrannous. Because of his advocacy and enforcement of them, Speaker Reed was denounced as a "czar," and much more roundly abused than the present Speaker has ever been. These two were the only changes made in the past fifty years enlarging the power of the Speaker. He has the power to determine when a motion shall be considered dilatory. It is not, however, a power which can be used to suppress legislation. The Speaker can not, by declaring any motion dilatory, prevent or retard the passage of a bill. On the contrary, the object and effect of placing this power in his hands is to prevent the unnecessary and intentionally wasteful consumption of time, to prevent unfair obstruction, and to put it within the power of the majority to legislate.

The provision for counting a quorum is equally imperative and important. This is a very large body. The Constitution requires a majority of all its Members to constitute a quorum. It was an outrageous proposition which so long obtained that Members physically present, taking part in debate and demanding roll calls, could by sitting mute when their names were called break a quorum without leaving their seats, and thus delay legislation.

The Supreme Court of the United States has sustained the constitutionality of counting all Members present in ascertaining a quorum, and nobody would be willing to go back to the old plan.

The third important change was in making 100 a quorum in Committee of the Whole House. Under the old rules the requirement of a majority of the entire membership, and the use of dilatory motions, had made the transaction of business in Committee of the Whole at times impossible.

THE MAJORITY IN CONTROL ALL THE TIME.

The fourth change, being in the order of business, as prescribed by Rule XXIV, gives the majority much greater opportunity than it had before to reach such business as it desires to transact. This rule is apparently so much misunderstood, or rather so little understood, that I insert it here as part of my remarks:

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. The daily order of business shall be as follows:

First. Prayer by the Chaplain.

Second. Reading and approval of the Journal.

Third. Correction of reference of public bills.

Fourth. Disposal of business on the Speaker's table.

Fifth. Unfinished business.

Sixth. The morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees.

Seventh. Motions to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Eighth. Orders of the day.

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committee without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committee in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by Members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

3. The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment, except business in the morning hour, shall be resumed as soon as the business on the Speaker's table is finished, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules.

4. After the unfinished business has been disposed of the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar, and if the Speaker shall not complete the call of committees before the House passes to other business he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the last bill under consideration: Provided, That whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days, it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn.

5. After one hour shall have been devoted to the consideration of bills called up by committees, it shall be in order, pending consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or, when authorized by a committee, to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill, to which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made; and if either motion be determined in the negative it shall not be in order to make either motion again until the disposal of the matter under consideration or discussion.

6. On Friday of each week, after the unfinished business has been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and if this motion fails, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

I call particular attention to the sixth and seventh clauses of the first paragraph. As the standing committees are called in regular order, and one of them calls up a bill, any gentleman who desires that it shall not at that time be discussed can raise the question of consideration. The question would then be put by the Speaker (as provided in Rule XVI), "Will the House now consider the bill?" Should a majority vote in the negative, the call of committees would be proceeded with, and other bills called up might be similarly treated until the desired bill could be reached.

At the end of the call of committees any Member may move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of bills on the Union Calendar, or for the consideration of a particular bill, when authorized by a committee. Another Member, preferring another bill, could move it by way of a substitute amendment. If a majority desired to take up either bill, they would vote accordingly; but if not, then a vote in the negative would end that matter, and a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider some other bill would be in order.

We have certain days for suspension of the rules and every Friday it is in order to go into Committee of the Whole House for bills on the Private Calendar. But the majority may rule otherwise and take up public business, if it shall so prefer. This is a very flexible rule, well intended to place the business of the House within the control of the majority of its Members. The business is within the control of the majority all the time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Before the gentleman gets off the subject of the change of order of business in the Fifty-first Congress, I want to ask him whether it is not true that in providing for the new form of order of business it was also provided that it was in order for any committee that had reported a bill to move to suspend the rules and fix a day for its consideration, such motion to be carried by a majority vote?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, it is not in the rules now.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is not in the rule, and has not been since the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not remember that I stated that it was.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But if the gentleman will excuse me, the gentleman said that the Reed rules as adopted in the Fifty-first Congress were substantially those of to-day.

Mr. OLMSTED. Substantially.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. He does not think it an important thing whether a committee shall have power to move to suspend the rules and fix a day for consideration of a bill they have reported.

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, the chairman or any member of the committee can make a motion of that kind.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But it has to be carried by a two-thirds vote, while only a majority vote was required under the Reed rule.

Mr. OLMSTED. If he wants it to go to a future day he need not call it up to-day at all. He can let the call go to the next committee and call up the bill for consideration when his committee is needed again. No two-thirds vote is required for that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think the Speaker should say, "No, Mr. GAINES" or "Mr. OLMSTED," "I will not recognize you to bring up that bill," and by that refusal deny the House, and, I may say, deny the Senate, the right to consider that bill and pass it or not pass it on its merits? That is what I have been kicking against.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is a very pertinent question, and I will endeavor to answer it a little later.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is why I have made 200 or 300 speeches, as the gentleman estimates, and I would make 5,000,000 of them before I would finally surrender to that way of doing.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I overlook it, I hope the gentleman will again bring it to my attention.

Now, just a word as to the power of the Speaker under the old rules.

POWER OF THE SPEAKER UNDER THE OLD RULES.

In advocating the changes in the Fifty-first Congress, a distinguished Member, who had seen long service, said:

Before I refer to these rules particularly I want to say that for many Congresses I have sat in my place as a Member of the House and have seen, under the rules of former Houses, the Speaker, frequently without the aid of even a minority of one but frequently with the aid of a minority of one, or at least of a small minority, absolutely hold at arm's length the great majority of the Representatives of the people upon both sides of the House. So far as former Congresses are concerned, especially those of recent date, you may search the whole range of parliamentary history and nowhere in any English-speaking country will you find such instances of absolute power as that exercised by the Speaker of those Congresses under the code of rules which then prevailed, with or without the aid of a minority of the House of Representatives.

The old rules placed in the hands of the Speaker more power to prevent, the new rules more power to expedite, legislation.

The adoption of these changes was upon the one side styled "tyrannical." The other contended that, if so, it was the tyranny of the constitutional majority of the House and preferable to the tyranny of an irresponsible minority, sometimes consisting of only one Member, which made it impossible to carry out the theory of majority rule, upon which our Constitution and form of government are based.

There was no misunderstanding or doubt as to the object and effect of these changes in the rules. Mr. Mills, of Texas, who led the opposition, admitted that upon one occasion a minority had held the majority at bay by alternating 128 times the motion to adjourn and the motion to fix a day to which the House should adjourn. He said:

Pass these rules and there remains no limitation of the power of the majority.

Well, they were passed, and they are the rules of the House to-day. The entire Democratic party upon this floor voted against them because they put it in the power of the majority to do business, and yet so ignorant of their operation and effect were the members of Mr. Bryan's Denver convention that they, in their platform, demanded that this House "shall again become a deliberative body, controlled by a majority of the people's Representatives." "Again" must refer to conditions before the adoption of the present rules, to which conditions neither this House nor the country would be willing to return.

DEMOCRATIC INCONSISTENCY.

While some of our Democratic friends are complaining that even now all desired legislation can not be reached for consideration, I call their attention to the change in their position since 1890, when they were led by Mr. Mills, who said upon this floor, during the discussion of these changes:

They (the people) do not want a great library of laws passed. Our fathers built this Government upon the theory that the people who are least governed are best governed; that the fewer the laws, the better. * * * We believe with our fathers that we do not want many laws and we do not want them rapidly made.

And he quoted approvingly Henry Thomas Buckle, the author of the "History of English Civilization," who had laid it down as a rule that there is but one wise act that any legislative body can pass, and that is an act to repeal some former act.

Mr. Chairman, when our Democratic brethren are in the minority they kick against these rules; when they are in the majority, they adopt them. It was perhaps the proudest moment in the life of Thomas B. Reed when, as the leader of the minority in a subsequent Congress, presided over by Speaker Crisp, he made it impossible for the majority to do business under the old rules and compelled the adoption by that Democratic Congress of the very rules against which the recent Democratic national convention ignorantly inveighed. If they were again in the majority, they would again adopt these rules substantially as they now exist.

It is undeniable that their object and effect has been, and is, not to take power from, but to give it to, the majority in this House.

RESULTS COMPARED.

The Republicans advocated and adopted the changes in 1890, because they gave additional power to the majority. The Democrats opposed them for that very reason.

That the present rules do not retard but, on the other hand, do expedite business, readily appears from the RECORD.

Under the old rules the Forty-ninth Congress (1885–1887), sitting three hundred and thirty days, passed 424 public and 1,031 private acts and resolutions, a total of 1,455.

The Fiftieth Congress (1887–1889), under the old rules, sitting four hundred and twelve days, passed 570 public and 1,257 private acts and resolutions, a total of 1,827.

The last, or Fifty-ninth Congress (1905–1907), sitting only three hundred days, under the present rules, passed 774 public and 6,249 private acts and resolutions, a total of 7,023.

That these rules have not curtailed debate may be gathered from the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself.

The debates of the Forty-ninth Congress, sitting three hundred and thirty days, occupied 11,592 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Fiftieth Congress, sitting four hundred and twelve days, occupied 13,205 pages, largely taken up with lists of yeas and nays.

The Fifty-ninth Congress, sitting three hundred days, covered 14,490 pages, comparatively few of them being taken up by calls of the yeas and nays. In the matter of debate, as well as in legislation accomplished, the advantage is clearly with the present rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? How many of those bills were pension bills?

Mr. OLMSTED. None of the 774 public acts were pension bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many were bills to pay just claims against the Government?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know how many of them. I assume that they were all just, because they were passed. I presume they were all just bills that were passed.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman consider this extraordinary multiplicity of laws a proof of merit of the system that facilitates their enactment?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is at least a denial of the proposition that by the present rules legislation is prevented. Whether or not it is desirable to prevent it is another question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He is discussing the platform now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. One more question, since the gentleman has alluded to me pretty generally—and that is all right. The gentleman has quoted from Mr. Mills the old doctrine that that people is best governed that is least governed. Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not discussing that question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You quoted it. Do you approve that?

Mr. OLMSTED. A discussion of that would carry me too far. I am not called upon to approve Democratic doctrines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You quoted a Democrat.

Mr. OLMSTED. I quoted him as against you. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now I quote your own reading against you.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment more. If that Democratic doctrine was good when pronounced, then it is good to-day, and it is a reason why we should not give so much power to the Speaker, whether a Democrat or a Republican, to govern this House and thereby govern the people of this country.

Mr. OLMSTED. If you want to stop legislation, go back to the old rules. They certainly did put it in his power to prevent it to a great extent—much greater than the present rules.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Is not the objection, not that there are not a sufficient number of bills passed, but that the Speaker is clothed with and exercises the power to determine what bills shall not have an opportunity to pass—what bills shall not have a chance for consideration? Is not that the objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is a pertinent query to which I will come very soon, and if I overlook it I will be glad to be reminded of it. I prefer to reach it in the order as arranged in my mind.

WHY EVERY MEMBER CAN NOT SPEAK AT PLEASURE AND HAVE ALL HIS BILLS CONSIDERED—A MANIA FOR LEGISLATION.

But, it will be asked, Why is it—if the present rules do tend to expedite business—why is it that every Member can not have an opportunity to rise in his place "not by the permission of anybody, but responsible alone to his God above him and his constituents behind him," and "present what he chooses for the consideration of this House? The only way to accomplish that would be for all of us to speak at once and consider all our bills simultaneously. Speaking one at a time and considering one bill at a time it can not be done under any rules. Life is too short.

The trouble lies in the large number of Members, one having just as much right to be heard as another, and in the overwhelming number of bills.

The American people seem to have a perfect mania for legislation.

Not only are there 46 state legislatures grinding out laws, but we are expected to pass more than all of them combined.

The business before Congress has doubled within the past ten years.

There were more than 4,300 bills offered in this House upon the opening day of this session.

In the last, or Fifty-ninth, Congress there were offered in this House 25,897, and in the Senate 8,627 bills, a total of 34,524.

In the present Congress at the close of business on the 5th of January there had already been offered in the House 26,127, and in the Senate 8,594 bills and resolutions, a total of 34,721. And the end is not yet.

We have upon this floor 391 Members and enough Delegates to make in round numbers 400. Knock off a few thousand bills and for convenience call it 30,000.

If we allow an average of one minute for each of the 400 Members to debate each of the 30,000 bills that would allow for debate alone 12,000,000 minutes or 200,000 hours, equal to 20,000 days of 10 hours each. Allow 300 working days to the year and we have 66⅔ years as the requisite time for debate of the pending business. The reading of the bills, roll calls, etc., would carry us beyond three score and ten, the allotted life of man. But the life of a Congress is only two years.

PRIVILEGED MATTERS.

The impossibility of considering all proposed measures and the absolute necessity of passing some of them has made it imperative that certain classes of business shall have the right of way over others. The Government itself could not continue without appropriations for the expenses of its various departments. The great appropriation bills, therefore, are and must be given precedence over other business. The rules provide that reports from the committees having these bills in charge may be presented and the bills themselves be in order at any time after the reading of the Journal. These bills call for more than a billion of dollars in every session of Congress. Perhaps no greater duty is imposed upon us than that of carefully scrutinizing and pruning down in the interest of economy these vastly important and often exceedingly complicated measures. This takes time. We have seen sometimes five or six weeks consumed in the consideration of a single appropriation bill.

The appropriations when made can not be paid unless the Government Treasury be supplied with revenue for that purpose. Therefore, reports and bills from the Ways and Means Committee are always in order after the reading of the Journal, unless interfered with by some matter even more highly privileged.

Business reported from the Elections Committees touching the rights of Members to their seats are privileged, and so are matters touching the rules and order of business when reported by the Committee on Rules.

The business of the Committee on Enrolled Bills is, of course, privileged, and conference reports touching matters in dispute between the two Houses. Then we have questions of personal privilege, touching the rights, safety, dignity, or integrity of the proceedings of the House collectively, or the rights, reputations, or conduct of Members individually. These are most highly privileged, having precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn.

A resolution of inquiry addressed to the heads of any of the executive departments of the Government, having been referred to the appropriate committee, becomes privileged, unless reported to the House by that committee within one week.

All these matters, and others which might be mentioned, consume a great amount of time and take precedence of the great mass of pending bills of other kinds. The Speaker is required, and never fails, to recognize anyone calling up any of these privileged matters. Thus it was that a few days ago, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] rose in his place and called up a resolution he had offered, calling upon the Secretary of State for certain information touching the rules of the British House of Commons, he was at once recognized by the Speaker and the matter taken under consideration.

THE SPEAKER'S EYE.

The Speaker is as much bound by the rules as anybody else. When a Member rises to a privileged matter the Speaker can not, in a parliamentary sense, allow his visual organ to rest upon any Member who may desire to call up a matter not privileged. Hence the familiar inquiry, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?"

The Speaker's eye is controlled and his vision directed, not merely by the written rules, but also by what may be termed the "common law" of the House. In very many matters he is by the unwritten rule bound to recognize the minority leader in preference to any other Member upon that side of the House, although they may all be upon their feet clamoring to be heard. He would consider himself equally bound to recognize the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who, by virtue of holding that position, is tacitly considered to be the leader of the majority upon the floor.

In the case of a bill coming from any committee he would recognize the chairman or other committee member reporting the bill before any other Member of the House. He would next recognize the ranking Member of the minority party upon that committee. Other members of the committee would then be recognized in order, unless the committee were practically all in favor of the bill, in which event Members opposed, but not on the committee, would be recognized, alternating with committee members who favored the bill.

The attempt of the Speaker to abrogate these customs would precipitate a riot. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, under whom I have the honor to serve, would feel justly outraged if I were recognized in preference to himself upon a matter reported from that committee. In the same way the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], the ranking Democratic member upon that committee, would be justly offended if he were not recognized next after the chairman.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes. If the gentleman will excuse me for a moment, I will yield.

The eloquent voice of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], chairman of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whom we all love and admire, would make this Chamber ring with his denunciation of the Speaker if he were to ignore him and prefer another Member of the House in the discussion of a bill reported by him from that committee.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who was instructed by that committee recently to report, and was thus placed by it in charge of the bill relating to the appointment of commissions of inquiry in cases of certain labor disputes, was without question recognized by the Speaker, not only to call it up for consideration, but also to be first heard in debate thereon.

From these things it will be seen that in the matter of recognizing gentlemen to call up the most important matters for our consideration and in recognizing Members for debate it is by no means a matter discretionary with the Speaker, dependent upon his choice of the measures they desire to call up, or his preference for one person over another in the matter of debate. This partly answers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. CANDLER. I want to ask where we find the authority in the rules that require us to go to the Speaker's room in advance and ask for his permission to call up the bill upon the floor of the House?

Mr. OLMSTED. Except in the case of local or private bills, nobody need do that. I am just coming to that.

Mr. CANDLER. What is the authority in the rules that justifies any such course as that?

Mr. OLMSTED. As to a certain class of legislation not of general importance there is perhaps a justification in the convenience—I might almost say actual necessity—of the thing. I have already stated that as to the most important matters coming before us, either for consideration or debate, there is no arbitrary exercise of discretion by the Speaker. He decides or recognizes according to the written rules and the common law of the House, to which I have referred. Now, there is a class of business in which he has a wider discretion. That consists of motions for suspension of the rules and requests for unanimous consent to call up bills out of order ahead of all other bills, which can be done only by unanimous consent, any single Member having the right to object.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman point out in the rules anywhere where the Speaker is authorized to exercise his discretion on the floor of the House in the recognition of a Member?

Mr. OLMSTED. What on earth would he exercise if not his discretion in recognizing a Member when many are clamoring to be heard at the same time? Somebody has to do it. There are 400 of us, and we would all be getting up at once and speaking at once if it were not for the requirement that a Member must be recognized before he can speak. Now, I come directly to the inquiries of the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Tennessee.

There are certain other matters over which, when no privileged questions intervene, the Speaker may, under the rules and the practice, exercise certain power and discretion. These are mostly private or local bills, which, by reason of the great pressure of business, can only be reached by being taken up out of order ahead of all other business, either by unanimous consent or by a two-thirds vote under a suspension of the rules. In recognizing Members to call up such bills the Speaker invariably alternates between the majority and minority sides of the House. Ordinarily he does not recognize any Member to secure the passage of a bill by unanimous consent, unless it is one which has been the subject of a unanimous committee report and is not likely to have opposition or to consume time in debate. It would be unfair to other Members should he do so.

Mr. CANDLER. But——

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will excuse me, I will try to answer the question he is about to ask. When I first came to Congress I was very indignant at Speaker Reed because he had refused to recognize me to ask for unanimous consent to consider an important measure in which my people were all very much interested. He said, "I am opposed to your bill." "Well," said I, "is it fair, just because you are opposed to it, that it shall not have an opportunity to pass? If I call it up, I may by my eloquence and reasoning persuade the majority of the House that it ought to pass, notwithstanding your opposition." "Yes," he said, "that is all right. You will have that privilege when you reach it in due order; but you are asking to obtain unanimous consent to take it up out of order, ahead of all other legislation. Unanimous consent means that every Member must agree to it, and that a single objection defeats your motion. Any Member has the right to object. Now, I have not lost my rights as a Member by reason of my speakership, and I object now, to save the time of the House. [Laughter.] If I did not object, some other Member would, as the committee's report is not unanimous."

It is only for a few minutes at a time, at irregular intervals, that such motion can be entertained in any event, and I have never known the power of recognition to be arbitrarily or unfairly exercised in the selection either of Members or of bills for unanimous consent. There must be lodged somewhere the right to discriminate, otherwise we should have three or four hundred Members on their feet at every opportunity, each clamoring for recognition for himself and his bill. In England local and private bills can not be introduced at all except upon the recommendation of referees appointed by the Speaker.

Mr. CANDLER. I would like to pursue my inquiry further, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield.

Mr. CANDLER. I want to ask under what rule of the House the Speaker is authorized to exercise his discretion in choosing between two Members who may arise at practically the same time on the floor of the House asking for recognition. If one of them rises a little in advance of the other and addresses the Speaker, why should he not recognize that one?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, that was thrashed out long ago. Years ago, in the early days, if the Speaker recognized one man somebody else could appeal from that recognition and move that somebody else be heard. But that did not work. There were too many demanding recognition at the same time. It was found better to allow that discretion to rest with the Speaker. It has been left there for the last fifty years, and I apprehend that it will always be.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER. Does the gentleman believe that the rules ought to justify the Speaker in recognizing one man in advance of the others when he arises on the floor of the House, representing the same number of population of the United States that any other Member does, and rises in advance of the other Member?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, if it will please the gentleman any better, I will say that the Speaker ought to recognize the whole 400 of us at once and let us all speak.

Mr. CANDLER. Then, the gentleman believes that the Speaker should be left in absolute control of the whole situation on the floor of the House?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no.

Mr. CANDLER. Leaving legislation——

Mr. OLMSTED. He is not left in control of legislation.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask my question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have permitted the gentleman to ask quite a number.

Mr. CANDLER. But I have not finished my question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Very well; ask it. I yield.

Mr. CANDLER. I want to ask if the gentleman believes that the Speaker ought to have the power on the floor of this House to absolutely control legislation by refusing to recognize the representative of the people of the United States of America, for whom he stands on the floor of this House, and in that way direct legislation absolutely according to his own will and power?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think that any Speaker ought to have that power or ever did have that power or ever attempted to exercise that power.

Mr. CANDLER. Does not the Speaker exercise that power on the floor of the House at this time?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no.

Mr. CANDLER. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I invite the gentleman's attention to Rule XIV, clause 2, which is as follows:

When two or more Members rise at once, the Speaker shall name the Member who is first to speak.

Now, we will suppose the gentleman from Iowa is in charge of the military appropriation bill. It is considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The committee rises, and the Chairman reports the findings of the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Missouri, pending the passage of the bill and after the ordering of the previous question on the passage, moves to recommit with certain instructions. The gentleman from Iowa does not awake to the situation, but springs to his feet when he is prompted and moves to recommit without instructions. Which would the Speaker recognize? I am assuming now where they were not on their feet at the same time—at once. Which does he recognize?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I have seen him recognize the gentleman upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have never seen him do so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Under the practices of the House, I think he ought to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In spite of the rule which says—

When two or more Members rise at once he shall decide who is first to speak.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is nothing there which abrogates the unwritten rule and general practice that the gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to the first recognition. I do not think anybody would want that provision abrogated—that unwritten law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think the Speaker of this House last session did right to refuse to allow any Member from either side of the House to bring up for consideration a free wood-pulp bill, when a majority of this House wanted to pass a free wood-pulp bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will say to the gentleman that if upon his side of the House there had not been so much filibustering by his party last session there would have been opportunity for discussion of a free wood-pulp bill and a good many other bills. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I asked the gentleman seriously, and I know he can answer it seriously. Did the Speaker do right, in that matter, to shut off this House as he did?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think the gentleman from Tennessee did more to shut off business than the Speaker. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am opposed to the Speaker, whether Democrat or Republican, having any such power to exercise, and I have opposed it inside the House and out of it.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I regard the gentleman as an authority on this question——

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not claim to be.

Mr. SIMS. On the subject of unlimited debate. I recognize that each Member of this House can not speak perhaps as long as he wants, and there must be some limitation, but is it not fair to the country and the House and fair to the proper consideration of the legislation of the House as a whole to have opportunity to use as much time in debating a bill as the Senate has upon the same measure?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, Mr. Chairman, the House can debate and take all the time it wants. There is nothing in the rules to prevent it, unless a majority of the House decides otherwise. We are in Committee of the Whole House now, and there is no end of debate. We can not stop debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when our most important legislation is affected. There is no previous question here. Debate here can be stopped only by rising, going to the House, and there by a vote of a majority of the House in the House itself this general debate can be limited. There is no trouble about debating as long as the majority is willing. Now, one minute upon the subject of recognition to ask unanimous consent for a private bill to be taken up out of order. The Speaker, I think, has the same right to object to unanimous consent that any of us has. He exercises the authority to recognize anybody only in the case, usually, of a bill which has behind it a unanimous committee report and one which would not be likely to involve debate.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. So far as private bills are concerned, as a Member of House I am more to blame than the Speaker is for there not being recognition for unanimous consent, because some six or eight years ago under Speaker Henderson, when private bills were coming up here in the morning, every morning, without an opportunity for the House to consider them, and we having days set apart especially for the consideration of private bills, and having to object to a great many of them after their merits or want of merits had been stated to the House, I notified the Speaker that thereafter whenever recognition was asked for a private bill I should object. "Well," the Speaker said, "that being the case I might as well tell gentlemen that there is no use of their being recognized for unanimous consent on private bills, because objection will be made." He adopted that rule during the remainder of his term—I think he served part of two terms after that—and when Speaker CANNON was elected I told him of the arrangement I had made with Speaker Henderson and the reason why, and then I told him I would object to the consideration of private bills when public business was waiting, but would remand them to their rights—to the days which they had in the House.

Mr. OLMSTED. As I have stated, it is only at irregular times when such motions could be recognized in any event. In England bills of that class could never be introduced at all except by permission of referees appointed by the speaker, so that his power here is apparently less than in the Commons.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

During the last session a gentleman, speaking of the Committee on Rules, said:

It can nullify all rules. It can even prescribe beforehand the details of a measure to the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

There never was a greater mistake. The Committee on Rules, of which the Speaker is ex officio chairman, can not do anything of the kind. It can not change a rule, nor pass a bill, nor prescribe the details of any bill. It may, and occasionally does, report to this House for its consideration a rule or order providing for the taking up of a particular measure of great public importance not among any of the privileged classes of legislation and which, but for some special action giving it precedence over others, would not likely be reached for consideration. When the Committee on Rules reports such an order, the House itself takes action thereon. If a majority vote in its favor, the order suggested by the committee becomes the order of the House. Otherwise it is of no effect. The Committee on Rules merely recommends. Whatever action is taken is the action of the majority of the House. This function of the committee is exercised to expedite and secure legislation, and not for its defeat. A case in point is that of the currency bill, which was taken up and passed at the last session in pursuance of such an order, recommended by the Committee on Rules and adopted by a majority of the House.

The complaints against the Committee on Rules are usually that they do not bring in orders for the immediate consideration of all the other bills in which we or any considerable number of Members are interested. It will readily be seen that if this committee should recommend, and the House should adopt, such orders in favor of many measures, it could be done only by retarding the great volume of absolutely essential legislation privileged under the rules, as I have pointed out. It is, therefore, only in rare and unusual cases that the committee makes a recommendation in favor of a particular measure. If it should make very many of them it would become the duty of the House to vote them down.

What I started out to say, however, is that the functions of the Committee on Rules are not to defeat, but to help to expedite, important general legislation. The powers of this committee are just the same as they have been for many, many years. They were not enlarged by the present rules.

The great controlling reason why we can not all be heard whenever we may wish, and have all our bills called up and considered, lies in the fact that there are so many of us and so many bills that the consideration of all of them is an absolute impossibility within the life of a Congress, or, indeed, within the life of an ordinary human being.

AMERICAN CONGRESS AND BRITISH PARLIAMENT COMPARED.

I have sometimes heard the wish expressed that our rules were more like those of the House of Commons. A distinguished and justly celebrated Englishman, having observed us for a time from the gallery, is reported to have thought our procedure complicated and technical. It occurs to me that some comparison may prove not uninteresting.

Our House of Representatives consists of 391 Members.

The House of Commons contains 670 members.

Our Constitution requires a majority of all our Members, or 196, a quorum, to do business.

In the House of Commons 40 constitute a quorum.

With us if there are less than 196 Members present and the point of no quorum is made, all business is suspended until a quorum is secured.

In the Commons, when a point of no quorum is made and less than 40 members are present, the whole House does not stand idle, but that particular bill stands over until the next sitting, the House in the meantime proceeding to the next bill, unless the point of no quorum is made against that also.

Speaker Reed was called a czar, and his conduct revolutionary, because in determining a quorum he insisted upon counting all Members present, including those who had not voted.

The speaker of the House of Commons is by rule expressly authorized to count a quorum, and to include himself to make a quorum.

The speaker of the House of Commons, like the Speaker of this House, possesses and exercises the power to refuse to put a dilatory motion.

Here a Member desiring to present a bill, either private or public, may do so without permission of anybody. He simply puts it in the basket upon the Clerk's desk, and it is at once referred to the proper committee for its action.

In the House of Commons a member desiring to bring in a public bill must first obtain leave to do so.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is leave ever refused?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is often refused.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Not with the present rules.

Mr. OLMSTED. He must move for such leave at the commencement of public business, on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. If the motion is opposed, it is optional with the speaker whether debate shall be allowed.

If the main object of a bill is to impose a charge upon the public revenues of the United Kingdom or upon the people, or to appropriate any money so charged, or to release or compound money due the Crown, its introduction must be authorized by the Committee of the Whole House and agreed to by the Crown.

Our rules, as I have already explained, allow a certain privilege or precedence to revenue and general appropriation bills and certain other matters.

In the House of Commons government business has precedence at every session, with certain specified exceptions. The government arranges the order of its own business as it sees fit, and His Majesty's managers have the right to place its orders of business in the orders of the day.

When private bills are reached, unopposed private bills have precedence of opposed private bills.

Here there is no restriction upon the presentation of private or local bills, but it is a very difficult thing to secure the introduction of one in the House of Commons or the House of Lords. Before such a bill can even be introduced there must be presented a petition setting forth the character and terms of the proposed measure. Even before that can be done there must have been compliance with the terms of no less than 68 standing orders, the filing of notices to the various departments or municipalities, corporations or individuals which are or may be interested in the bill, etc. All these 68 standing orders must have been complied with before December 17. Upon the 18th of January examiners appointed by the Speaker begin the examination of the petitions for the introduction of such bills. Before these examiners there must be made specific proof of compliance with each one of the 68 standing orders. The promoters of private bills are heard by the examiners; usually by agents or by counsel.

If the examiners appointed by the Speaker find that the 68 standing orders have been complied with, the bill then goes before referees appointed by the Speaker. The real fight on a private bill is before these referees. Counsel and parliamentary agents are heard by them. If they finally grant the petition, then, and not until then, may the bill be introduced into the House. Even then the presiding officers of the two houses and their counsel have supervision over them and meet and determine which of them shall be offered in the House of Lords and which in the House of Commons, so that there may be no duplication.

Sir Thomas Erskine May, in the eleventh edition of his Parliamentary Practice, published in 1906, says:

> The persons by whom the promotion of private bills, and the conduct of proceedings upon petitions against such bills, are actually carried out, are parliamentary agents; and the conference between the two chairmen or their counsel in January is attended by the agents concerned in the bills proposed to be introduced into either house.

When the bills have finally passed the examiners and the referees and have been introduced into the House, the order in which they shall be taken up for consideration is determined by ballot.

The proceedings with reference to the introduction and passage of a private bill are so complicated that no one would think of attempting to secure such an enactment without the aid of a parliamentary agent, and would usually require counsel also.

Volumes have been written upon parliamentary practice with relation to private bills.

FEES FOR PASSAGE OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Very heavy fees are charged and taxed as costs by the proper officers in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords.

Wheeler's Practice on Private Bills, published in 1900, shows that the fees to be paid upon deposit of the petition is £5; that there must be paid £5 for each day occupied by the examiners; £5 upon the presentation of the bill in the House; £5 upon the first reading of the bill; £15 on second reading of the bill; £15 upon report from the committee; £15 on third reading; and £10 for each day's sitting of referees. There are certain other fees, so that the average to be paid in the House of Commons for each such bill is not less than £100, or $500. To the House of Lords about the same amount of fees must be paid.

Gentlemen who complain that through failure to obtain recognition or otherwise they fail to get their private or local bills through this House may receive some consolation from considering these difficulties in the House of Commons.

The methods of procedure and the difficulties in the way of introducing public bills in the House of Commons, and the still greater difficulties and great expense attendant upon the introduction and passage of private bills, all tend to lessen the flood of legislation, so that the British Parliament is not called upon to consider one-twentieth part of the business which presses upon us in the American Congress.

Through the power of appointment of examiners and referees it seems to me that the power of the speaker over that class of legislation is greater than that possessed by the Speaker of this House.

Mr. LANDIS. Who pays that expense?

Mr. OLMSTED. The person who wants to get the bill passed. These fees or costs are for local or private bills, like our bills permitting a railroad to cross a navigable river, and every kind of private bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Local bills, are they not?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not understand the gentleman to consider that in the British House of Commons £100, or $500, is charged in fees for a public bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; not on a public, general bill. On those there are no fees at all. Now, in the matter of debate over there.

DEBATE.

As a general proposition there is not as much freedom of debate in the House of Commons as in this House. Recognition by the speaker is as essential there as here. Formerly, if the speaker in the Commons recognized one member, a motion might be made that another member should speak. That was not found satisfactory, and now the question of recognition is there, as here, left entirely with the speaker. When recognized by the speaker, a member of the House of Commons must at all times confine himself to the question before the House. If he does not he is very promptly called down. He is not permitted to read his speech or to read from books or papers. If he speaks tediously or with iteration or reiteration it is held not to be not only within the authority but also the duty of the speaker to call him to order and compel him to discontinue. Just think of that! The speaker may stop a man if he speak tediously. [Laughter.] I fear that I should be called down before concluding these remarks.

A member there may not even discuss, or refer to, another pending bill. He must stick closely to the one before the House. The same rules obtain in committee of the whole. They do not have there any such freedom or latitude as we have here in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where a Member, having obtained the floor, can talk upon any subject he pleases. If he has offered, or is interested in, some measure of public importance he may speak upon that subject and bring it to the attention of the country. Our debate in Committee of the Whole is not all heedless rhetoric; not all as water poured upon sand. Great issues are brought to the attention of the House and to the country, and if supported by the people are ultimately brought to fruition here. The currency question, abuses of railroad and other great corporations, the regulation of trusts, the question of tariff revision, are all instances of great questions which have been discussed here in Committee of the Whole until practical results have followed. When a bill is read by paragraphs our rules confine debate very closely to the question in hand or to amendments which may be offered. In no parliamentary body is discussion had more directly upon the points at issue than here when the bill reaches that stage. Our pro forma amendment to strike out the last word gives everybody an opportunity to be heard upon the merits of the paragraph as it is reached in the reading of the bill.

CLOSURE OF DEBATE.

In Committee of the Whole we have no previous question—no procedure for closing general debate. In the House, when it is demanded before any debate has been had, the rules allow twenty minutes upon either side.

In the House of Commons the closure, as they call it, may be demanded immediately the question is put. If it carries, all debate is cut off.

Their divisions, so called, take the place of our roll calls, but their speaker may, if he sees fit, declare the result at once without naming tellers.

TECHNICALITIES.

Our rules are 45 in number. The rules or standing orders of the House of Commons are no less than 249. Some of them are much more difficult of comprehension, and in their construction and enforcement more technical than ours. In taking a division they require all members to leave the floor and take positions which in our Hall would be equivalent to going behind the rail. Those desiring to vote "aye" return to the chamber through one gateway; those opposed through another gateway. Two tellers are stationed at each passage to take down the names of those passing through. These tellers then march down the aisle and report to the speaker. It is customary for the tellers whose side has triumphed to march on the right so that members seeing them may know at once which side is victorious. On one occasion when they marched down there was great cheering from the supposed victorious side, but the tellers announced a tie. Thereupon there was a great uproar and several hours of debate, at the conclusion of which it was held that the tellers should have marched down the aisle mixed. [Laughter.] They were made to come down a second time in that order. Upon another occasion serious and protracted debate arose as to the voting status of certain members who, when the question was put, had been in the room or space behind or partly beneath the seat occupied by the speaker. It was a sort of retiring room for him and was called "Solomon's porch." The dispute was as to whether a member who, presumably trying to get the speaker to agree to recognize him, had been in "Solomon's porch" when the question was put, was entitled to vote.

A SQUINTING SPEAKER.

Apparently they have the same difficulty as here in catching the eye of the speaker. We at least have been spared the confusion which arose from the fact that a celebrated speaker of the House of Commons had such a squint, or crossing of the visual organs, that upon one occasion two members, in different parts of the house, were equally confident of having "caught his eye."

If we now and then feel annoyed by some ruling or other action of the speaker we have at least never reached such a stage of rage as that recorded by Lord Halbertson of a member who, in a fit of passion, shook his fist at the speaker of the House of Commons and called him "a damned, insignificant little puppy." [Laughter.]

While there are many points of advantage in our favor, I have not been able to discover any upon the side of the member of Parliament, except that under their rules he may second a motion by simply lifting his hat, without rising or speaking. That is not very important, as with us very few motions require a second. That legislation was not always speedily accomplished there is evident from the recorded instance of the inquiry by the Queen, "Now, Mr. Speaker, what has passed in the lower house?" To which the speaker laconically replied: "If it please Your Majesty, seven weeks." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I should like to know what further time the gentleman would desire.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended until he finishes his speech.

Mr. OLMSTED. I shall require only a few minutes more.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If there is no objection, the gentleman can have all the time he desires, until he concludes his speech.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. So much as the gentleman may desire, even if it is an hour, if he wants it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan yields one hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that the Speaker, whether Democrat or Republican, always should have the sole power to name the committees of the House? And if you say "yea," please inform the House and the country—because everybody is going to read your good speech—how the Senate appoints its committees?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, Mr. Chairman, it was once tried here or contemplated that the House name the committees. I think they tried it only in the case of a few select committees. There was so much dissatisfaction that they went back to the old plan and authorized the Speaker to appoint them all. The Senate is somewhat different, because of the fact that the Vice-President, the presiding officer, is not a member of the body at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And it is a continuing body.

Mr. OLMSTED. Also it is a continuing body.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They could authorize the Vice-President to appoint the members of the committees.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, yes; they could authorize the President.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But they never have.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; and I do not suppose they ever will.

Notwithstanding the great advantage of a smaller quorum, legislation is accomplished with much greater difficulty in England than here.

The British Parliament in its session of 1907 passed 56 public general acts, 176 local and private acts (including public acts of a local character), and 7 acts relating to divorces, etc., styled "Private acts not printed," making a total of 239 acts passed.

In the same period of time the American Congress passed 276 public acts, 29 joint resolutions, and 2,675 private or local acts—a total of 2,980 measures passed by our Congress as against 239 by the British Parliament.

The committee which reported the changes in our rules in 1890 in its report declared that it had "to the best of its ability prepared and reported a code of rules under which the will of the majority of the House shall be ascertained and expressed with accuracy and with the utmost expedition consistent with fair and due debate and consideration."

They have certainly demonstrated their right to be considered the best set of rules under which this House has ever acted. They may not be perfect. They may not be entitled to endure unchanged to the day of judgment, but they deserve protection against a possible day of no judgment. There should be no hasty and ill-considered change. If a revision is required, or when it is attempted, it should be accomplished only after the most thorough and careful consideration, comparison, and study to the end that no good rule may suffer the fate of the good old colored preacher who, according to the statement of one of his elders, was "cut down in the height of his zenith." [Laughter.]

The Fifty-ninth and the present Sixtieth Congress, acting under the present rules, will be found to have passed not only more in number, but also more important remedial and beneficial public laws than any other two Congresses since the war, if, indeed, the record was ever equaled during any period within the history of the country.

During these two Congresses President Roosevelt will have had more recommendations enacted into law than any of his predecessors in that high office. The present rules have not prevented but have assisted in bringing about these results.

They are certainly entitled to defense against the unjust and ignorant aspersion of the recent Democratic convention and its demand that the House of Representatives shall "again become" what it was in the Fiftieth Congress, before the rules were changed. The matter was succinctly and well put by Theodore Roosevelt, who, in an article printed in The Forum in 1895, said: "Speaker Reed, by reason of his action as Speaker in the Fifty-first Congress, rendered a great service to the American Republic. In order that the Republic may exist there must be some form of representative government, and that government must include a legislature. If the practices to which Mr.

Reed put a stop had been allowed to continue representative government would have become an impossibility." [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by appending an article upon the rules and business of the House under them prepared by the gentleman who stood at the Speaker's table in 1890 when they were changed, has been there ever since, and is the best qualified of any man in the United States to speak concerning them, Mr. Asher C. Hinds. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is one recently published, and is as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE.

[By Asher C. Hinds, clerk at the Speaker's table.]

The rules of the House are subject to great misunderstandings, for the reason that they are necessarily somewhat complicated, and because of the necessity of adjusting with approximate fairness and equity the interests and rights of a large membership—a membership really larger than that of the House of Commons, because of the size of our quorum—and the necessity of handling a great amount of business. The belief has been widely inculcated that the rules are obstructive of the free course of business and that they concentrate too much power in the hands of a few. This criticism would have been true twenty years ago, but in 1890 the rules were reformed for the very purpose of expediting the course of business and destroying the obstructive power of the few. The reforms of that period have been generally overlooked, because of the fact that the great battle over filibustering absorbed public attention and divided the House and even the country into two political camps. The great improvements made in the rules for the order of business are almost always overlooked by those who recall the conflicts of 1890.

The House of Representatives now has a system which lists all the business reported by committees on three calendars of the House, and these calendars are acted on, not according to the arbitrary will of any man, officer, or committee, but according to certain rules of precedence intelligently and equitably framed. It is true that this order of business is subject to interruptions principally by the highly privileged classes of business pertaining to the general appropriation bills and revenue bills. It is absolutely essential that these bills shall have precedence, because their consideration is the main business of the House of Representatives, and of every other legislative body that represents a free people.

But this rule of precedence for revenue and appropriation bills is by no means ironbound. If the House at any time feels that the appropriation bills are taking up time which ought to be devoted to other bills on the calendars, it may at once set aside these appropriation bills; and it is not necessary to evoke any obscure or troublesome machinery in order to do this, because the Committee on Appropriations in taking up its bills must every day move to go into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills. If the House does not wish to do this, a majority need only vote "no" instead of "yes" when such a motion is made. If the appropriation bills absorb an undue measure of time, the fault rests absolutely and entirely with the membership of the House.

Assuming, then, that the House does wish to set aside an appropriation bill, in order to consider other matters, the way is easy and plain after the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole has been voted down. Some one member (any one member) has only to demand the regular order, and the regular order would be to call the committees for bills on the House Calendar, unless some miscellaneous privileged matter should obtrude itself on the House. In that case, which would not ordinarily happen, the matter could be brushed aside by the raising of the question of consideration, which may be done by any Member, and the House at once would vote without debate whether it would consider or not consider the intruding matter. If it voted not to consider it, the demand for the "regular order" would next bring the call of committees. The call of committees would carry the House to the House Calendar, whereon are all public bills which do not carry appropriations of money. The House could remain upon this call of committees, bringing up bill after bill for an hour, or for the whole day's session; and if it still wished to consider more bills of this character, the House could take a recess until the next day, and on the next day could go on with this same order until it cleaned up the entire calendar.

If the House should not wish to remain on the House Calendar, and should want to consider the calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—in order to take up public bills requiring an appropriation, and not having the privilege of general appropriation bills—it could at any time, after the call of committees has proceeded for sixty minutes, allow a Member to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and any Member has the absolute right to make this motion. If a majority sustain the motion, and the House goes into the committee, the bills on the calendar may be taken up in order, or if the committee do not wish to take them up in order, a motion may be made, and carried by a majority vote, to take up any particular bill. If when the day is done the House still wishes to further proceed with that calendar, a recess may be taken until the next day, and the House may then continue to consider these bills. This not only may be done, but has been done.

Private bills are also taken up with equal facility on Fridays of each week. It is true that Friday is often taken up for public business, but this never can be done except by a majority vote of the House.

In other words the House, and the House alone, has absolute control of its order of business, and there is no bill anywhere on any calendar of the House that a majority may not freely take up without undue trouble.

In the earlier days of the House the order of business had not been arranged with so much skill as is embodied in the present form of the rules. There often arose at that time an occasion when the House could not, even though it earnestly desired to do so, get to some particular portion of its business. To obviate that a system was devised of suspending the rules in order to take up any particular business which could not be reached under the regular order. That this motion to suspend the rules might not be abused it was necessary to put some restriction on it, and that restriction was the requirement that there should be a two-thirds vote to set aside the regular order.

It is obvious that this was at best a clumsy device, because many important matters of legislation, which could easily command a majority vote, could not pass because of party or other differences. A remarkable illustration of this occurred at the outbreak of the civil war, when Thaddeus Stevens submitted a resolution asking information of President Buchanan's administration as to whether it had taken any means to put in a state of defense the forts and arsenals in the harbor of Charleston, S. C. Here was a matter which it would seem as though the rules of the House should have given an easy method of passing upon. The rules to-day would do so; but in those halcyon days, to which the critics of the present system of rules look back for their imaginary liberty of action, the two-thirds vote was required, and Mr. Stevens failed to command it, even in that patriotic House. Such a failure would not be possible under the present system of rules.

The House suffered under this awkward device to relieve what might be called "jams" in the current of its business until 1883, when a device, by means of a report from the Committee on Rules, was evolved whereby the motion to suspend the rules was relieved of the two-thirds requirement. In order to prevent abuse of the new device and to prevent its destroying entirely the regular and orderly procedure, the restriction which was taken off the final vote was put upon the making of the motion, and it was required that a motion to suspend the rules in order to take up a special bill must be first passed on by the Committee on Rules before it could be made on the floor and agreed to by a majority. This was the origin of the "special order," which became an excellent instrumentality, inasmuch as it enabled the House to consider the business jammed in the regular order by a majority vote. The necessary use of the special order was continued until 1890, when for the first time the flexible and efficient order of business now in vogue was put in operation. This new rule for the order of business would have been sufficient at that time to do away with the use of the special orders from the Committee on Rules had it not been that the habit of obstruction was rife in the House, and the special order continued in use as a means of thwarting that obstruction by providing a fixed method of consideration upon a particular bill and by shutting out dilatory and obstructive motions. The use of the special order has continued, although it has not been so much used in later years, and business has proceeded more according to the regular order. The function of the Committee on Rules is remedial. Most of the bills which it assists might be passed in another way. To use a commonplace illustration, the Committee on Rules, by the special order, takes a bill up on the elevator instead of requiring it to be carried up by the stairs. But in every case a special order is of no effect until agreed to by majority vote of the House.

There is another method of taking up business out of the regular order, and that is by the unanimous consent of the House. It is used for matters to which there is no opposition. This method is very convenient, because it is simple and expeditious, involving no votes, no waste of time in roll calls, and no contentions. But obviously it serves for a limited class of business only.

Perhaps the greatest criticism of the rules rises over the recognitions by the Speaker. It is plain to anyone who understands the rudiments of general parliamentary law that it is necessary that any Member who proposes to make a motion to the House, or who proposes to make a speech, should address the Speaker and be recognized by him before proceeding. In a House as large as this, it is equally necessary that there be no appeal from this recognition by the Speaker. Formerly there was an appeal and the possibility of a yea-and-nay vote to determine whether one man or another should be entitled to the floor. But thirty years ago, during the Speakership of Samuel J. Randall, the House had grown so large that it was found necessary by Speaker Randall to deny this right of appeal on a question of recognition. He did this in rulings, and it seems quite evident that those rulings met the general approval of the House, since there was little of complaint at the time.

But it does not follow because there is no appeal that the Speaker's right of recognition is absolute. With two exceptions, which will be considered later, it is far from absolute. The Speaker, both for motions and debate, recognizes in accordance with certain fixed principles, which he would not think of violating; and it is absolutely essential for the ordinary conduct of business that he should not violate these principles. The public business, under the rule for the order of business, is flowing on through the House continually, in accordance with the methods prescribed for that rule. And manifestly, the Speaker must recognize for each motion in accordance with the necessities of this stream of business. This means that at each turn he must recognize the Member who, by his committee position, or by his relation to the business about to come before the House, is best qualified to make the motion for its disposition.

On the day when the order of business brings up a matter, for instance, from the Committee on Ways and Means, the Speaker must recognize Mr. PAYNE, the chairman of that committee, because that gentleman is in charge of the business coming before the Ways and Means Committee, and under the rules and usages of the House to recognize anyone else would be to substitute confusion and disorder for order and progress. If the order of business gives the time to the Appropriations Committee, the Speaker must recognize Mr. TAWNEY for the same reason. And after the matter is once under debate the usage is absolute that he must recognize the senior member of the majority contention on the committee having charge of the pending bill; and after that the senior member on the minority side of the contention has the preference. And thus he must alternate down through the entire committee. But if, as rarely occurs, the debate extends beyond the ranks of the committee and into the general membership of the House, the Speaker must still preserve the alternation between the majority and minority sides—not necessarily the political majority and minority, but the majority and minority sides of the pending question at issue. Outside of this limitation, at this point of the debate the Speaker does have an arbitrary power of selecting men who shall speak, providing there is a great press for time by Members. But a situation like this rarely happens. It happened not over twice, probably, during the last session of Congress. Usually in such cases the House by unanimous consent gives to the two men in charge of the majority and minority sides of the bill the right to control and divide out the time, thus taking it from the Speaker entirely; but, as a matter of fact, the criticism of the Speaker's power of recognition never rises out of a situation like this.

The truth is, the real complaint of the Speaker's power of recognition comes from his recognitions for motions to suspend the rules and for unanimous consent. The very nature of unanimous consent shows that the rules may not be justly criticised for any arbitrary recognition on the part of the Speaker; because when a Member asks unanimous consent, what he really demands is that the rules of the House be set aside in order to take up some bill that is not in order at the time under the rule. It is therefore evident that under any system of rules recognition would have to be arbitrary. The Speaker has the same right to object that any Member has, but his method of objecting is to refuse to recognize for unanimous consent. If this is an arbitrary power, it is an arbitrary power that any Member of the House may thwart him in the use of; for after the Speaker recognizes for unanimous consent any Member may object, thus doing away with the procedure and permitting the House to proceed under its order of business.

There does exist an arbitrary recognition on the motion to suspend the rules. Formerly the Speaker was compelled to recognize any Member who first got his attention on the motion to suspend the rules. The result was that the motion was greatly abused. Men would prepare resolutions on subjects of no practical standing in the House, sometimes so artfully worded as to be political traps, condemning many Members to political danger in their districts, whether they voted for or against them. Members therefore did not naturally like to run the risk of such pitfalls or to be put on record upon questions not of practical moment to the the United States or which might involve local prejudices in their homes, and thus destroy their usefulness without any compensating good. So it happened that frequently the House on suspension day adjourned in order to escape this snare, and in 1880 the number of suspension days were reduced to two a week, so as to make the dangers of the day as little as possible.

About that time Mr. Speaker Randall, without complaint of the House, began to exercise the right to determine when he would recognize for the motion, thus still further placing it under control. If the motion to suspend the rules were essential to the business of the House, this usurpation by Mr. Speaker Randall would have had bad consequences, but in 1883 and in 1890 the rules were improved by enlarging the functions of the Committee on Rules and by improving the rule for the order of business, so that bills in an unfavorable position might be gotten out by a majority vote, without recourse to the older and clumsier method of suspending the rules. And to-day the motion to suspend the rules is used two days in the month to supplement the proceeding by unanimous consent. There are many bills which can not get through by unanimous consent, because two or three Members may be opposed. In such cases the motion to suspend the rules affords a convenient and easy method of dealing with them.

In the last session of Congress a peculiar situation arose, caused by the determination of the entire minority side of the House to obstruct the public business, and immediately a form of martial law was declared in the House, and the motion to suspend the rules was used daily and upon the arbitrary recognition of the Speaker. But this was only a temporary condition, brought about by urgent necessity in order that the public business might be transacted. Such an occasion had not arisen before for five years, and then only for a very limited time, and in all probability will not arise again for another five or ten years.

In conclusion, it is not impertinent to protest against the assumption made in some magazines and newspapers that the House of Representatives is an inefficient legislative body. It is, on the contrary, highly efficient, not surpassed in this respect by any other body of similar size and constitutional limitations.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have agreed to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] one hour, but the gentleman from Massachusetts has not certain data at hand which he desires to use, and so I have agreed to yield to him his hour at 3.30 oclock. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] one hour, or so much thereof as he may desire to use.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, from the hour of the enactment of the present Republican tariff law, Democrats in Congress and out of Congress have revealed its tyrannies, its inaccuracies, its absurdities. Repeatedly we have shown the necessity of thorough and scientific revision both for the relief of the consumer and for the extension of our foreign trade. For eleven years we have demanded the revision of the tariff; for eleven years the Republicans have ridiculed and ignored us. With every pretext that gifted and powerful leaders could devise, they have opposed and postponed revision. Before elections they would claim that business might be disturbed; after elections they would say that existing conditions had been indorsed. Not till the golden bowl of national prosperity had been broken were they compelled reluctantly to undertake what the Democrats had urged for many years. To-day the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives are engaged in an apparent effort to revise the tariff.

The hurried and incomplete preparations for revision vindicate the Democratic contention that the Republican party is both unwilling and unable to make a sincere and effective rearrangement of the Dingley rates. James W. Van Cleave, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and one of the most prominent Republicans and business men of the time, has already repudiated the methods adopted by the Republican party in framing a new tariff bill, stating in a recent letter to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the Republican chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, that these methods are "radically, absurdly, fatally wrong." So disgusted was Mr. Van Cleave with the whole tariff procedure of his party that he declined to testify before the Ways and Means Committee. H. E. Miles, another leading manufacturer and Republican, is reported in the daily press to have said, after appearing before the Ways and Means Committee in the course of the recent tariff hearings, that while the committee was apparently disposed to get all the facts, it was without any machinery to aid in this end; that it was unable to secure the absolute truth; that it placed a premium on falsehood; and that it had collected nothing but Treasury tabulations and the statements of interested parties. A short excerpt from the testimony of Mr. Carnegie before the Ways and Means Committee will show the lack of accurate information and experience on the part of Republicans in charge of tariff revision and the inadequacy of the methods they have pursued:

Mr. LONGWORTH. You would not advocate the taking off of the duty on any American article without justification for it. I, personally, admitting that I know very little about the costs of steel, am inclined to think that we can substantially reduce the tariff on steel without injury to the American industry, and yet before I vote for it, if I should vote for it, I want to feel that I am justified in so doing. I do not know of any other way that I can personally feel justified, unless I know or have some opportunity of finding out something about the difference between the cost abroad and the cost at home. Is there any way that you can suggest to me—as a member of this committee, with practically every facility, the right to summon all witnesses, the facilities that this Government has, without the practical experience, and without the means of getting it, because we must act as promptly as possible—of finding out those things?

Mr. CARNEGIE. In reply, Mr. LONGWORTH, I know of only one way that this committee can arrive at anything approaching the real truth of the difference in cost, and that is to have men belonging to the steel industry—men familiar with it, who are not interested in either the foreign or the American works; experts of the highest character and ability—to be charged with visiting the works of Europe, selecting in each country the best works, because you will be greatly misled if you select works that are not properly managed.

It is hardly necessary to add that the suggestion of Mr. Carnegie as to the only proper way in which to investigate the steel situation applies with equal force to all the other schedules, but has not been followed by the Republican party. It took 32 experts five years to do for Germany what the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and his Republican associates on the Ways and Means Committee, who know infinitely more of practical politics than of political economy, propose to do for the United States in five months. The public hearings before the Ways and Means Committee covered a period of six weeks, beginning Tuesday, November 10, and closing Tuesday, December 22. There are 14 schedules in the present tariff act and a free list, and over 4,000 commodities are involved. Thus the hearings did not average three days to a schedule.

Almost all the parties who appeared before the committee in the course of these hearings, either personally or by letter, had a direct pecuniary interest in the matter about which they testified. While on the subject of interested witnesses let me again quote from Mr. Carnegie's testimony:

Mr. CARNEGIE. My dear sir, allow me to tell you just what happened about that. I purposely refrained from reading the statements of interested parties. They are incapable of judging justly. No judge should be permitted to sit in a cause in which he is interested; and you make the greatest mistake in your life if you attach importance to an interested witness. You would not do it in a court of justice, would you? If the judge were interested in a cause, would you respect his decision? (No response.) Silence in the court. [Great laughter.] Upon my word, I must laugh at you people.

And it might be added that the whole country is laughing, too. [Laughter.]

It may well be said that almost all the testimony adduced at these hearings is without practical value. When we recall the fact that there are 216,262 manufacturing establishments in the United States, exclusive of neighborhood industries and hand trades, and compare with this number the discredited handful that addressed the Ways and Means Committee, we begin to appreciate the farcical character of the entire Republican tariff proceeding. The failure of the Republican party seriously to approach or sincerely to undertake the revision of the tariff should occasion no surprise.

A party that in time of peace enacted a tariff law embodying a higher range of taxes than the emergency charges of the civil war, taxes which it has permitted to remain in undisturbed and merciless operation for more than eleven years, taxes that have exhausted our people, obstructed our trade abroad, and forced us to the rear in the commercial march of the world, can not be expected to have either the courage or the disposition to institute a proper readjustment of the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

While the Republicans are engaged in pretended revision it may not be out of place again to direct the attention of the American people to the barbarous features of the present tariff law. Perhaps the most illuminating event in the history of the Dingley tariff is the demand of the American manufacturer, so long its principal beneficiary, for its thorough revision. In February of last year a central committee representing practically every industrial interest in the United States, including the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Grange, the Farmers' National Congress, the boards of trade of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Baltimore, and so forth, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the present Congress and pleaded in vain, to use the exact language of the chairman of the central committee, Mr. H. E. Miles, the well-known Republican and manufacturer before alluded to—

> For relief from the infinite grasp and hurt of the present tariff; a tariff that is not a protective tariff in any sense; a tariff that is in truth and in fact a bastard tariff, many of the schedules having no relation whatever to the principle of protection, or if related, then misapplying and abusing them.

Nothing could discredit more completely the comparatively few manufacturers who at the recent tariff hearings sought to retain or to increase existing schedules than this official demand on the part of the great body of American manufacturers for tariff relief. In an article in the North American Review of last January, published the month before he came to Washington as the representative of the industrial interests of the country, Mr. Miles said:

> We make small objection to the three hundred millions of tariff revenue that went last year into the Government Treasury, but we make very great objection to the five hundred millions or more that went into the pockets of the favored few who collected the revenue for their personal and private gain, with the connivance and approval of Congress, in products made within this country.

Contemplate for a moment the significance of this statement; grasp, if possible, its shocking import. This Republican, this manufacturer, this protectionist, and withal this critical student of public affairs tells us that the Dingley system is taking from the American people in sheer plunder five hundred millions a year or more.

It is probable that this statement, coming from a beneficiary of the system and a member of the party that sustains it, is extremely modest. On the basis of this Republican and protectionist estimate we may safely say that the Dingley tariff taxes during the eleven years of their operation have wrung from the American people over five and a half billion dollars for the enrichment of individuals, a sum over five times the size of our entire national indebtedness, a sum greater by almost a billion dollars than has been expended during the last eleven years on the navies of Great Britain, Germany, Russia, Italy, France, and the United States combined, a sum nearly three times as great as has been expended on the American Navy during the last one hundred and seven years, a sum five times as great as the war indemnity exacted by Germany from France, the most colossal war spoil in history, a sum representing nearly $1,700,000 for every day in the year. Think of it! Under the flag of the free practically the sum of $1,700,000 is taken from the American people through exorbitant tariff taxes between the rising and the setting of every sun. And yet President Roosevelt and the Republican party have permitted this inhuman system to flourish unrestrained. In his eight annual messages to Congress the President has mentioned the tariff in but two, the second and seventh, in 1902 and 1907, in the former ridiculing the idea that the trust evil could be corrected by the reduction of duties and suggesting revision in the vaguest terms, in the latter, after five years' silence, stating briefly that it is probably well the tariff should be carefully scrutinized every dozen years or so.

While his messages have almost shrieked with denunciations of men who have extorted millions through traffic pools and stock manipulations, they have been strangely dumb as to the men who have taken billions through the tariff. But perhaps it is unfair to criticise him for inactivity as to the tariff when we remember that his explosive energies seem to have been principally devoted to the dignified and statesmanlike occupation of organizing the most distinguished "Ananias Club" in history. [Laughter.] The chief difficulty of his biographers and apologists will be the explanation of his course on the subject of the tariff. And as the administration of this most remarkable man nears its close the one fact that stands out most prominently above all others, the fact that will put a question mark in front of his name for all coming time, is that while he kept astir a characteristic agitation against wrongdoing in public and private life he never for once lifted his powerful arm against the chief evil of his time, the Republican tariff. Indeed the practical result of his crusades for civic righteousness has been to divert attention from the tariff vandals, to give them eight years of plunder without serious interference. Whether this was his intention I do not know; I believe in all earnestness, however, that no man in American history represents so profound a combination of the subtlety of Louis XI and the audacity of Charles the Bold.

In the article before referred to Mr. Miles states further that the one underlying principle which alone justifies protection is that the schedule shall cover the difference between the cost of production in this country and the cost of production abroad, thereby maintaining a higher wage here and standard of living. He then states that this principle has never been practically applied by the so-called "tariff legislators" at Washington; that most of the Dingley schedules were made in utter disregard of any such principle, having no reference to the difference of cost, however liberally figured, and that in many cases they increase the difference in cost of manufacture at home and abroad from 5 to 1,000 times. He shows how the Standard Oil trust is sheltered and supported by the Dingley law. He points out that while the Dingley law places 42 kinds of oil on the free list it provides that if there be imported into the United States crude petroleum or its products produced in any country that imposes a duty on petroleum products exported from the United States there shall in such cases be levied a duty equal to the duty exacted by the country importing. He shows that the only country able to ship petroleum in any considerable quantity to this country is Russia and that Russia levies duties on crude petroleum and its products ranging from 100 to 200 per cent.

He says that when the Dingley law was being framed the Standard Oil representatives sought direct protection and failed, but that the effect of this proviso was to give the most rapacious of all the trusts from three to five times what it had openly asked. Thus Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft, and the Republican party, in maintaining the present tariff law, are as responsible for the rapacities of Standard Oil as John D. Rockefeller himself. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Miles proceeds to say that, as a result of the above proviso, the American people pay from 37 to 60 per cent per gallon more for oil than Europeans, and that were we to try to import oil we would find it safeguarded by a tariff tax of 150 per cent or more. This Republican, this manufacturer, this protectionist, this tariff beneficiary, proceeds to show that dozens of trusts enjoy a similar shelter, and says that the Dingley tariff is graft masquerading as protection. He shows that American borax can be bought abroad for 2½ cents per pound, but retails in America at 7½ cents per pound, the difference representing the Dingley borax rate of 5 cents per pound, and that the Dingley steel rates exceed the total wage cost of making steel in the United States, although steel is made here as cheaply as anywhere else in the world. He says that the present tariff system exerts a corrupting influence in the country, making dishonesty profitable, virtue and self-denial contemptible.

Evidently divining the fact that a continuance of the Dingley system would so weaken and impoverish the people that the home market would become a thing of the past, and that they could not permanently render tribute to the tariff kings; recognizing the necessity of rearranging and liberalizing our tariff relations abroad in order that foreign markets might be developed on a scale commensurate with American capabilities, this accredited representative of the protective interests becomes the severest critic of the Dingley system.

Where may we find a more complete vindication of the Democratic attitude as to the tariff? During the eleven years of the Dingley Act we have repeatedly exposed its oppressions, its errors, its crimes. Repeatedly we have shown it to represent a revival of the most vicious economic superstitions of the past. Repeatedly we have shown that the Democratic conception is the true conception of tariff legislation, because we apply to this problem, as to all others, the deathless doctrine of equal rights. Repeatedly we have summoned history to show that probably at the only period when protection was justifiable from an economic view point, the period following the war of 1812, when an influx of European goods threatened to engulf the young industries developed by a decade of isolation resulting from the Napoleonic struggles, a period when American industry was in a genuine, not pretended, infancy, the Democratic party supplied the needed assistance through the 20 per cent Madison tariff of 1816, four decades before the Republican party came into being.

Repeatedly we have pointed to the tariff annals of the succeeding thirty years to show that the American people discussed and tested every phase of the tariff question to accept the 36 per cent Democratic tariff of 1846 as its permanent solution, a tariff so universally satisfactory that the hostile Whig administration of 1848 did not alter it, so completely embodying the judgment of the first sixty years of American fiscal discussion and experience that the tariff ceased to be an issue. Repeatedly we have shown that Alexander Hamilton, in his famous report on manufactures, the very fountain of the protective theory, advocated import duties only on the basis of temporary necessity and retaliation for high charges abroad, stating that the continuance of bounties on manufactures long established must always be a questionable policy, because a presumption will arise in every such case that there were natural and inherent impediments to success. Repeatedly we have shown that Henry Clay and the early defenders of protectionism regarded it only as a means of sheltering new industries until they could become self-supporting, not as an instrument of perpetual loot. Repeatedly we have shown that the emergencies of the American civil war restored the system of excessive tariff taxes, and that they were then permitted only on the theory of an unprecedented national peril, with the passing of which they were to be permanently reduced.

Repeatedly we have shown that the Republican party, repudiating the memory and the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, emerged from that memorable strife arm in arm with the interests its emergency tariffs had enriched, and that it has continued the wicked partnership by increasing instead of removing the war charges, until to-day it burdens the American people with the highest tariff taxes mankind has ever known in time of peace. Repeatedly we have pointed to the numerous trusts the Dingley tariff has developed—to the oil and borax trusts described by Mr. Miles; to the steel trust, with a capital approaching a billion and a half, a consolidation of 213 manufacturing and transportation concerns, exporting steel rails, billets, blooms, plates, bridges, barbed wire, wire nails, tin plate, tubes, and pipes to all the world at prices greatly below the prices at home, dominating the basic industry of the United States; to the meat trust, which controls the whole domestic market; to the paper trust, which exacts from American newspapers a tribute of sixty millions a year; to the linseed trust, the lead trust, the match trust, the sugar trust, the tobacco trust, the machinery trust, the hide and leather trust, the woolen trust, and hundreds of other trusts, including almost every phase of industry and production.

Repeatedly we have shown that these trusts condemn the vast mass of toilers to mere employeeship and charge the American people, through the aid of the Dingley tariff, for food and raiment, for the implements of trade and occupation, for nearly all the essentials of life, prices in many cases equal to those of four or five decades ago; although steam, electricity, and machinery have reduced the cost of production probably fiftyfold, prices in all cases so high as to constitute financial despotism. Repeatedly we have pointed out that the very period of the most unlimited power and enrichment of the trusts has been and is to-day the period filled with the smoke and thunder of the Roosevelt sham battles against them. After years of clamorous pretense not one of the great industrial trusts has been permanently dissolved; not one trust official has been made to feel or fear the imprisonment feature of the national law against monopolies in restraint of trade. Repeatedly we have shown that the trusts have increased the prices of raw materials to certain American manufacturers while selling the same materials at less price to foreigners, thus enabling the latter to undersell our own manufacturers with our own raw materials in the markets of the world, and that this fact, combined with the fact that other nations are erecting retaliatory tariffs on account of our obstinate adherence to the Dingley schedules, is as surely driving an important class of American manufacturers out of the United States to foreign countries where such intolerable conditions do not prevail as the oppressions of Philip II and Louis XIV drove the Flemish and Huguenot weavers from the Netherlands and France forever.

Already the Singer Machine Company has located an extensive plant at Kilbowie, in England, and large factories on the Continent; the Babcock and Wilcox companies a great plant at Renfrew, England. The Westinghouse Company has established at Trafford Park, in England, one of the largest factories of the Eastern Hemisphere, and other plants at St. Petersburg and Havre. The Chicago American Tool Company has extensive interests at Frazerburg, Scotland, while the Western Electric Company has built large factories in London, Paris, Antwerp, and Berlin. The General Electric Company has five great factories in Europe and a large new plant which it has recently constructed at Rugby, England; the Hoe Company and the American Linotype Company are operating in many foreign capitals; the Draper Company is operating in the cotton manufacturing districts of England, equipping English factories with the Northrop loom. The American Locomotive Company and the Bullock Electric Works, of Cincinnati, have already established plants in Canada. It is not improbable that many of our immense flour mills will in time be transferred to Canada to secure access to its infinite fields, unless the Dingley tax on flour is removed or reduced. The same thing may be said as to our paper mills. Already many Canadian cities have created a new municipal officer, whose special duty it is to hasten the removal of American manufactories to various parts of Canada. Repeatedly we have shown the falsity of the Republican cry that high tariffs mean high wages; have shown that in truth the American workman, considering the value of his product, is paid under the Republican protective system the lowest wage on earth.

Hear the testimony of A. Maurice Lowe, the eminent protectionist, in his recent book entitled, "Protection in the United States:"

> We have the authority of all competent observers in America that one of the reasons to explain the secret of American prosperity is the great productive power of the American workingman, his output being so much larger than those of his foreign competitors that the cost of the American product is less than that of any other workman.

Repeatedly we have shown that not over 10 per cent of American laboring men are engaged in protected industries, and that in these the increase in wages has not equaled the increase in the price of the trust-controlled necessaries of life. It is the estimate of Carroll D. Wright that 17½ per cent of the value of manufactured articles goes to the laborer. The average duty on foreign articles competing with domestic articles is about 50 per cent. The American manufacturer gets 50 per cent of an article's value to equalize the difference between foreign and domestic labor cost when the entire domestic labor cost is only 17½ per cent of the domestic article's value. How long will such deception flourish? Repeatedly we have shown that under the Dingley system the farmer sells his surplus abroad in competition with the cheapest production in the world and buys the implements of labor and the necessities of existence in the trust-ridden, tariff-locked markets of the United States; that under the Dingley system the American farmer gets the lowest and pays the highest prices on earth.

Repeatedly we have shown that the Republican protective system has driven American shipping from the seas. It is now impossible to build an American ship to be operated without loss in the foreign trade in competition with the world on account of the rapid increase in price of ship material under the present tariff system. Said Mr. Orlott, a prominent American shipbuilder, before the United States Commission of Mercantile Marine in 1904:

> There is a difference of about 40 per cent (in the foreign and domestic cost of shipbuilding) on account of the tariff. * * * Because everything in the way of material entering into the construction of a ship is highly protected here. It is not only the steel that forms the hollow of the vessel that is affected in price; it is every conceivable item that goes into a ship.

What more humiliating spectacle could have been devised than that of our fleet of 16 battle ships parading the seas with all its fuel transported of necessity in foreign ships under foreign flags? What more embarrassing situation in the event of war could be conceived? Repeatedly we have shown that under this system the wealth of the country has been wrested from the many by the few, 1 per cent of the families in the United States now owning, according to Spahr, 99 per cent of the Nation's substance, and less than 5,000,000 of the 16,000,000 families of the United States, according to the last census, owning their homes entirely free from incumbrance, nearly 9,000,000 American families owning no homes at all.

Repeatedly we have shown that under this system more women and children are driven from the fireside and the school into the battle for bread than ever before in our history. Five million American women, nearly 2,000,000 American children, are to-day, through pressure of the increased cost of living, among the pale numbers of daily toil.

> She leaves her babe to others,
> To climb the factory stair;
> She creeps home at night to her children
> Too weary to bind her hair.
> With the sacred chrism of motherhood
> In her tired and careworn hands,
> Through her they must come with souls born dumb,
> The men who shall rule our lands.

And yet they tell us that this is an American system; we deny it. They tell us that it is for the protection of Americans. We say that those who profit by such a system cease to be Americans when the first dollar coined from women's sighs and children's tears, from the bent backs of men, touches their polluted hands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Repeatedly we have shown the utter hopelessness of tariff relief through Republican agencies. The Republican party has never touched the tariff except to make it more oppressive. Not content with defeating every attempt to lower the emergency rates of the civil war, it has increased them to such an extent that the war taxes which were tolerated only as temporary expedients in an unparalleled national crisis are modest when compared with the Dingley taxes of to-day. In 1867, in 1870, in 1872, and in 1882 pretended readjustments were undertaken by the Republican party, with the invariable result that the privileged classes retained complete possession of the power to despoil. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], one of the most powerful members of the little stand-pat group that dominates the Republican party, a member of the present

Ways and Means Committee, and a man who will exert greater influence in shaping the character of the tariff changes now in progress than all the other members of the committee combined, said in his keynote speech in the House of Representatives last February that personally he did not believe there was any necessity for a general revision of the tariff. In view of these facts, in view of the careless and unscientific preparation for readjustment, can anyone doubt that the present Republican revision will be as faithless and ineffective as the Republican revisions of the past? Let it be said here that the Democratic party alone has shown sufficient ability to make a just and comprehensive revision of the tariff. It revised the high tariffs of 1828 and 1842 with conspicuous fairness and skill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But there is another and equally fundamental phase of the tariff question. Not only must the tariff be reconstructed from the standpoint of internal conditions, it must also be rearranged with a view to the promotion of advantageous trade relations abroad. In the latter respect, as well as in the former, the Republicans have been fatally neglectful. For eleven years they have permitted the Dingley tariff rates to stand without attempting generally to modify them either for the deliverance of our own people from domestic extortion or for the cultivation of friendlier trade relations with the world. That the framers of the Dingley tariff contemplated the development of our foreign trade through the reduction of its schedules in return for reciprocal concessions abroad is shown by the terms of sections 3 and 4 of the Dingley law, section 3 providing a limited and temporary, section 4 a permanent and fundamental, system of reciprocity. Although section 3 affected but little more than a dozen among the thousands of articles scheduled in the Dingley law, these few articles being mainly the products of other countries, namely, argols, brandies, champagne and other sparkling wines, still wines, vermuth, paintings, statuary, tea, coffee, tonquin, tonka beans and vanilla beans, still the concessions obtained from other countries, such as Germany, France, Italy, Portugal, through a modification of the rates on these few articles, show what immense opportunities were lost through the failure of the Republican Senate to ratify the treaties formulated under section 4, which provided for a 20 per cent reduction on every schedule and every article in return for like favors abroad.

Since the passage of the Dingley law in 1897 many foreign countries have made practical application of the principle of section 4 through a system of dual and triple tariffs, with which they have mobilized the trade of the world, while we have taken hardly a single step forward in this general advance. Thus we who announced the principle of reciprocity through the enactment of section 4 have allowed it to perish by limitation and nonaction, while other nations have appropriated it to our discomfiture. Eleven reciprocity treaties were negotiated by the American commissioner under section 4, which, had they been ratified before the passing of the two-year limit laid down in the Dingley law, would have enormously increased our trade with Germany, France, and other nations. Having permitted these reciprocity treaties to die, having adhered to avaricious schedules for eleven years while the world about us has been undergoing a general commercial readjustment, having reached a point in our internal development where foreign markets are imperative, confronting countries impatient beneath the high rates we impose on their products while we claim the most disproportionate concessions from them, we are face to face with the double crisis of a domestic population wearied beyond endurance by oppressive tariff taxes and the probable loss of what few advantages we now possess in foreign trade.

Does anyone imagine that Germany will long submit to the temporary agreement with the North Commission, by which she saves about $208,000 annually on her exports to the United States, while we save through the enjoyment of her minimum tariff rates about six and a half millions every year on our exports to Germany? Already the tariff rates of many leading nations, including France, Venezuela, British South Africa, Canada, and others have been raised on our goods in especial retaliation against the Dingley Act. It is only a matter of time when the maintenance of the Dingley rates will excite the permanent hostility of mankind. We can not recall too often the words of William McKinley, who appointed the commissioner to negotiate the neglected reciprocity treaties under section 4, who looked upon them as the peculiar glory of his administration, and who regarded their destruction in the Republican Senate with peculiar disappointment; the words he uttered in September, 1901, at Buffalo, in his last public address; words composing an eloquent and now pathetic plea for reciprocity. And yet the Republican platform of 1908 does not mention reciprocity. In four national platforms preceding 1908 the Republican party lauded reciprocity as one of the cardinal features of its tariff doctrines; to-day it scorns the historic policy for the extension of trade, with which the name of McKinley will be forever connected. What stronger proof could be had of the impotence and insincerity of the present Republican party than the silence of last year's platform on the great subject of reciprocity? It is true the Republican platform of 1908 advocates maximum and minimum rates, but it specifically restricts the function of the maximum rate to the prevention of discrimination. It would make the maximum and minimum system a weapon of retaliation, so far as foreign trade is concerned; nowhere does it speak of utilizing the system for the expansion of trade. The Republican idea is to use the maximum rate as a club with which to compel the acceptance by foreign countries of the present enormous schedules, or of schedules representing what the Republican platform calls a normal measure of protection at home. The moment such a system is put in practice it will mean universal commercial war. True reciprocity involves an interchange of substantial concessions; under the new definition of the Republican party it means, "take what we say or fight."

It is not possible that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, who are now framing the new tariff law, could have taken up in the short time at their disposal this most difficult and complicated phase of the tariff question with anything like adequate investigation or preparation. During the public hearings this phase received but little consideration.

The Democratic platform of 1908 contains an earnest plea for such reciprocity arrangements as will extend our trade abroad, and do no violence to present wage scales and standards of living.

There is nothing more humiliating to patriotic Americans than certain features of our relative position in the wealth and commerce of the world after fifty years of Republican rule. And yet Republican platforms and speeches are swollen with panegyrics on the development of the United States in wealth and commerce under Republican guidance. Republicans have pointed to the preponderance of exports during decade after decade of high protective tariffs. They have shouted prosperity until the word has become a mockery in the ears of millions of unemployed. They have pointed to the endless procession of commodities to alien shores from field, from forest, and from mine. They tell us in partisan exaggeration that we are sending coal to Newcastle, files to Sheffield, olives to Spain, Rhine wine to Germany, Budweiser to Berlin, sauerkraut to Hamburg, and shillalahs to Ireland. [Laughter.] They tell us of American bridges across the Amazon, the Ganges, the Danube, and the Nile. They tell us that the shriek of the American locomotive shakes the silence of the Pyramids. They tell us of the whir of American reapers in the fertile reaches of Canada and the Argentine, of the click of American typewriters and cash registers in London, Tokyo, Madrid, Buenos Aires. They tell us that the staffs supporting the yellow flag above the palace of the Mikado and the Union Jack on Windsor Castle were hewn from the pines of Puget Sound.

They forget that the acquisition of such articles as these is a greater tribute to the purchaser than to the seller. They tell us of what they are pleased to term a wonderful foreign trade. The Republican platform of 1908 challenges American intelligence by attempting a comparison of our national wealth with that of Great Britain and with that of Germany and France; it also boasts of our foreign trade. Now, what is the real position of the United States in the world's wealth and trade? It is true that, with an area of continental sweep and unequaled resource, our wealth in mere bulk exceeds that of every other country, being estimated at one hundred and ten billions. Yet Great Britain, with less than one-twentieth the area of the United States, smaller than the single State of California, with infinitely fewer raw commodities, and a soil worn by fifteen centuries of cultivation, with a population about half our own to feed, has a wealth of over fifty-eight billions, or more than half our own. France and Germany, each with less than one-seventeenth our territory, each smaller than the single State of Texas, the one with almost half, the other with almost two-thirds our population to sustain, both with soil and resources depleted by more than a dozen centuries of constant exploitation, of bloody and substance-draining wars, have each an approximate wealth of fifty billions, almost half our own.

These three countries—Great Britain, Germany, and France—with an aggregate area about one-sixth of ours, with all the other inequalities I have specified, supporting a population larger by sixty millions than our own, have a total wealth approximating one hundred and sixty billions, nearly a third more than the wealth of the United States. The practically contiguous countries of Great Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Germany, Switzerland, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, with a combined area less than a third of ours and far poorer in resources, an area that had sustained the burdens of civilization a thousand years when Columbus first saw Salvador, with a population of two hundred and sixty-five millions struggling for subsistence, have a total wealth of over two hundred and ten billions, nearly twice that of the United States. These countries have so skillfully husbanded their powers and so successfully developed reciprocal trade relations that, according to Harold Bolce, they—have more than twice as much money as the United States invested in transportation, nearly half a billion more than we have invested in mining, and almost 100 per cent more in manufacturing than America with its almost incredible energy can boast, and 200 per cent more agricultural wealth than the United States.

Great Britain, although smaller than California, has a foreign trade of over four and three-fourths billions against our foreign trade of three and one-fourth billions. British shipowners receive from three hundred to five hundred millions every year for transporting foreign goods and passengers, while we pay foreign shipowners an amount estimated all the way from fifty to two hundred millions annually for the conveyance of our external trade. Be this as it may, Great Britain has almost 50 per cent of the sailing and steam tonnage of the world, a ton to less than every three inhabitants, and carries more than 60 per cent of her own foreign trade in British bottoms.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. Is not the gentleman aware, Mr. Chairman, that in spite of this iniquitous tariff of which he complains, the export trade of the United States has steadily increased instead of diminished, until it is larger than in all history or in all contemplation of those who framed the present tariff laws?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is not as large as it should be in view of our immense resources and our immense energies and opportunities, and I propose to demonstrate that fact in a few minutes.

Mr. BATES. One other question, if it will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want the gentleman to remember that I will answer his first question at length by giving the figures.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. If my colleague will permit, I will state that one of the reasons is that we are selling domestic products cheaper abroad than we are selling them to our home folks.

Mr. BATES. So I have heard. Is it not true that some delegation from the gentleman's own State of Texas has appeared before the Ways and Means Committee asking a revision of these iniquitous rates on certain articles in which they have an interest, to wit, lumber and hides?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not now discussing the merits of any particular rate.

Mr. BATES. Let us get down to something specific. The people of the State of Texas desire to have free hides—to have the present tariff, or any tariff at all, off of hides?

Mr. SHEPPARD. What point does the gentleman attempt to make?

Mr. BATES. I am merely asking for information. Do the people of the great State of Texas desire free hides?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Some of the people desire free hides, and if you put shoes on the free list, we will all be in favor of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. The neighboring State of Missouri is here asking for tariff on zinc, is it not?

Mr. RUCKER. No.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Some of the gentlemen from Missouri can answer that question better than I can.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose it should turn out that some fellow from Missouri came up here and asked for a tariff, what has that got to do with it?

Mr. BATES. It would prove to a certain extent what the late presidential candidate, Mr. Hancock, stated, namely, that in some respects, after all, it is a local issue. It depends upon what industry is being affected. It proves that the South is waking up and beginning to look to her true interests.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but because one man in Missouri or a hundred men in Missouri want the tariff on zinc, it does not bind the people of Missouri as wanting that tariff. However, I do not want to take up the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I prefer now to pursue the course of my remarks.

Mr. BATES. If they looked to the interests of their State, possibly they would want the tariff on zinc and on other things.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose you look to the interests of the whole State?

Mr. BATES. That is what I mean.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly what I am doing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman's remarks do not affect the line of argument I am pursuing now. I am now speaking of the destructive effect of your whole tariff system, and I say that your belated attempt at revision is a vindication of the position we have taken from the hour the Dingley tariff was enacted.

The gentleman asked if our exports had not increased wonderfully under the Dingley tariff. I contend that our trade opportunities abroad have been sadly overlooked. Of the $1,000,000,000 of imports entering France to-day, we furnish less than 10 per cent; of the one and three-fourths billions entering Germany to-day, we furnish less than 14 per cent; of the three billions of exports entering Great Britain, we furnish less than 22 per cent; and of the thirteen and a half billions of exports entering all the other countries of the world, we furnish less than 15 per cent. What a field we view through the prison bars of a stand-pat tariff!

Mr. BATES. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, may I ask him another question? In order to compete with foreign ships we will have to build our ships cheaper than they are built abroad, will we not? That fact is evident; and in order to do that we will have to pay lower wages than we now pay, both to construct them and to run them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all; not relatively; because if you lower your extortionate tariff which makes it impossible to build American ships in competition with other countries and establish advantageous trade relations with these countries, you will so increase our foreign trade as to create such a demand for American ships that labor will have increased rather than diminished profits. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. Is not it a fact that the chief element in the cost of a ship is not the material, but the labor; that seven-eighths or nine-tenths of the cost is based on the price of human labor, and the element of wages is the element that must be taken into consideration most of all?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have already quoted from the testimony of one of the most prominent shipbuilders in this country—Mr. Orlott—showing that it is the increase of the tariff to the extent of 40 per cent on the materials that go into a ship that has made it impossible to build an American ship in competition with the world. I think I have answered my friend's interrogation as to the element of labor. I yield to no one in a desire to advance the cause and promote the interest of the hosts of toil.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me to allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not true that the shipyards of Great Britain are run under an eight-hour law, whereas we exact ten hours a day from men in this country?

Mr. LANDIS. I am simply asking for information, but it is my impression that material imported for the purpose of building American ships under the Dingley law comes in free of duty.

Mr. GILLESPIE. But the ship can only be used in foreign trade.

Mr. LANDIS. Ships built in the United States, to engage in foreign commerce. My understanding is that the material imported into the United States for their construction comes in free.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is a provision for the free admission of this material, but it is nullified by a further provision practically restricting ships so built to foreign trade and by a law which forbids ships in the foreign trade to touch at more than one American port in assembling a cargo. This condition practically paralyzes the industry of building American ships for the foreign trade.

Mr. LANDIS. I think the gentleman will ascertain, if he investigates the Dingley law, that my statement is true.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is, with the limitation already stated.

Mr. BATES. The most important element that enters in is labor.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That is not protected. Labor comes in free.

Mr. HARDY. What was the controversy between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]? Did it not grow out of the fact that a drawback is not allowed on shipbuilding material?

Mr. GRAHAM. Is not the gentleman aware that trade has been encouraged by subsidies granted by these foreign countries, which subsidies have not been granted by Congress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. These foreign subsidies are insignificant when compared to the total volume of the foreign trade of these countries and to the total capital invested in merchant ships. They can have but little effect. I proceed now with the comparison of our position in the world's shipping and trade with that of Great Britain. I referred to the fact that Great Britain had nearly half the foreign tonnage of the world.

The United States, once foremost under Democratic policies in the world's ocean trade, with its flag in every port, carrying not only the larger part of the world's trade but nearly 90 per cent of its own imports and exports in American ships, has to-day, after nearly half a century of Republican ascendency, not 12 per cent of the world's tonnage, taking into account our enormous coastwise trade, which is reserved for American vessels and which exceeds our foreign-trade tonnage in the ratio of 5 to 1. We do not average a ton to every 20 inhabitants, carrying to-day less than 15 per cent of our imports, less than 10 per cent of our exports, in American bottoms, and the American flag has practically disappeared from the great trade routes of the seas. Leading the world in the production of coal, iron ore, pig iron, steel, copper, lead, borax, petroleum, cotton, wheat, corn, oats, and cattle, in the invention and employment of labor-saving machinery, possessing unrivaled facilities for manufacturing in general, with a water frontage of 7,300 miles, our bays and rivers giving easier access to the interior than those of any other continent or country, we ought easily to lead the world in shipping and in trade. And yet to-day one of Germany's steamship lines, the Hamburg-American, has 100,000 more tons than the entire mercantile marine of the United States engaged in foreign trade. Germany, with all its inferiorities of age, area, and resource, has a foreign trade of over three billions, almost equaling ours. France, one-seventeenth our size and far behind us in natural wealth, has a foreign trade two-thirds as large as ours. The little country of the Netherlands, not much larger than the State of Maryland, more than 225 times smaller than the United States, with about one-fifteenth our population, has a foreign trade more than half as large as ours.

The ten European countries before alluded to, with a total territory less than a third our own and vastly inferior to us in natural wealth, with a population less than three and one-half times as large as ours, have a combined foreign trade of nearly fourteen and three-fourths billions, more by one and three-fourths billions than four times our own. Thus the little outworn countries of the Old World are leading us in the race for national wealth and international trade when, by a sensible employment of our superior resources and energies, we should be leading them.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman from Texas mean to assume that that proves anything in the contention he is making? Does not the contiguity of these nations—the proximity of one to the other, the dependence of one upon the other, the lack of independence and means, such as surround us in the United States—have almost everything to do with the figures he is quoting? The fact whether they are free trade or protection or tariff for revenue only has very little, if anything, to do with the figures he is quoting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am endeavoring to show that the relative progress of this country under Republican policies has been lamentably slow and that other countries are outstripping us in the race for wealth and trade.

Mr. BATES. What country does the gentleman cite as leading us in national wealth? Name one.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was speaking of trade; but there are several relatively greater than we are in wealth.

Mr. BATES. Name one.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Take Great Britain, to which I have already referred. It is less than one-twentieth of our size, smaller than the single State of California, with a population about half our own, and yet the total wealth of Great Britain is more than half as large as ours.

Mr. BATES. But what is the condition of her people to-day? Does not the gentleman know that in one city alone there are more unemployed than there are in all the rest of the cities of the United States?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Her supremacy in shipping and wealth and trade, despite these conditions, makes the tribute all the greater to her energies.

But let us examine our foreign trade more closely. Of our total exports during the last fiscal year, manufactured articles comprised less than 60 per cent, including foodstuffs partly or wholly prepared, which equaled nearly 20 per cent of the whole, and counting pig iron, unwrought leather, lumber, kerosene, and copper ingots, bars, and slabs as manufactures. Of Great Britain's annual exports, manufactured articles, not including foodstuffs, comprise over 80 per cent; of those of Germany, over 65 per cent; of those of France, over 55 per cent. We are shipping our foodstuffs and raw materials in foreign bottoms to western Europe, there to be converted into finished products that are resold to us at a profit or utilized to outstrip us in the markets of the world. We are denuding our forests, disemboweling our mountains, and exhausting our soil to send a stream of raw commodities to Europeans, with which they rebuild the waste and strain of centuries and humiliate us in the marts of earth. We are the day laborers, the serfs, and helots of modern commerce. With our copper Germany has electrified the world. Producing almost all the raw cotton suitable for manufacture, possessing unequaled means for its conversion into the finished product, we export over 62 per cent of the raw crop to be manufactured in foreign countries at a stupendous profit. Great Britain imports about $280,000,000 worth of raw cotton annually, about two-thirds of which comes from the United States, and sells it in manufactured form for $500,000,000 or more to other countries, ours included.

The portion of the $380,000,000 worth of American raw cotton annually taken by Great Britain, Germany, and France, which these countries convert into manufactured articles, they sell to other countries, ours included, for $675,000,000. The total farm value of our cotton crop of 1907 was a little over $613,000,000. Thus these three distant countries, producing not a pound of raw cotton, with fuel high and scarce, with a freight haul of over 3,000 miles across stormy seas, are making more money out of American cotton than the American producer himself. We export less than fifty millions of manufactured cotton, ten times less than Great Britain, much less than Germany and France. Practically monopolizing the raw product, we import more of the manufactured article than we export. If our tariffs had been framed with a view to the proper development of foreign markets and the cultivation of more amicable trade relations abroad, this condition would not exist. But this is not all. Our part in the trade of the world, of which Republicans boast, is really insignificant. Of our annual fifteen billions of manufactured goods we sell about one billion abroad, including foodstuffs. Of the billion-dollar industrial trade in the southern half of this hemisphere our share is pitifully small.

It is computed that Argentina alone buys more textiles from Europe than we sell to the whole world, and that the value of these textiles bought by Argentina exceeds the value of American commerce of every description going into all the ports south of the Isthmus of Panama. Great Britain's exports to Argentina alone in 1907 were more than $3,000,000 in excess of our exports to the entire continent of South America. We get the glory of the Monroe doctrine in South America and Europe gets the trade; we get a Republican platform on the subject of American supremacy and Europe gets the cash. Facing the Orient, both Asia and Oceania, with thousands of miles of seacoast, the Orient, where is located a majority of the world's population, we have less than 9 per cent of the Orient's foreign trade, a trade greater in totals than our own. We maintain the open door in the East, but European goods pass through. Great Britain's exports to China and Japan in 1907 were larger by more than twenty millions than our exports to the entire continent of Asia. Great Britain's exports to the Cape of Good Hope alone in 1907 were larger by twenty-six millions than our exports to the entire continent of Africa. And yet we pose as the commercial leaders of mankind. These boasting Republicans have made the United States the economic jest of the earth. Summarizing the tariff situation, it may be justly said that the Republican party, after nearly fifty years of almost uninterrupted control, has driven our ships from the seas, overlooked the proper development of our share in the trade of the world, challenged the commercial hostility of the earth, subjected its own members to the domination of the standpatters, and erected within our borders a system of fiscal tyranny that is slowly paralyzing the nation's energies. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. To what specific policy of the Republican party, or what phase of that policy, does the gentleman from Texas attribute our want of supremacy in the commercial world?

Mr. SHEPPARD. One of the principal reasons is the failure of the Republican Senate to ratify the reciprocity treaties negotiated under section 4 of the Dingley law with France, Germany, and other important countries by which our trade would have been enormously increased.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, after all, do not you think that there is still something to boast of in the fact we have such a large internal commerce?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly, we could not help from being great on that account. There has been no high protective law to obstruct the development of internal trade. While a tariff on foreign imports is essential from the standpoint of revenue it should not be so exorbitant as to impede our trade relations with the world.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is not the gentleman aware that his whole argument is one that was offered when we had up the question of a ship subsidy, when it was shown clearly that that was the only point where America did not protect; that the shipping of America lacked the protection of the Republican party? Now, when we urged your side of the House to help us pass a bill giving a little relief to this question in the way of a ship subsidy the gentleman cried out, "Another subsidy! Another payment of money to help these men grow rich, to help a trust!" And they voted the question down, when it was shown what we needed in South America to obtain that trade was an increase in our shipping.

Is the gentleman not aware that our goods from America have to go to Germany, France, and even to Spain, and then be retransferred to South America, because we have not the lines and vessels to convey them direct?

Mr. SHEPPARD. And who is responsible for that condition?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the Democratic party, for opposing our policy. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] We have urged assistance from the Democratic party, with a few Republicans, and they have failed to give that protection to American shipping that it is entitled to. It is the only thing that has not been protected by the Republican party, and as a consequence has declined.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman can not shift responsibility for governmental policies to the minority. You can not claim credit for what you think is good, and blame us for what you think is bad in the conduct of the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can not see it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Perhaps the gentleman refuses to see it. Furthermore, we claim our trade could be increased in far greater degree by the negotiation of trade treaties with foreign countries than by an attempt at creating a subsidy. We assert that the Republican party has failed to secure for us the position in the world's commerce to which our unequaled resources entitle us. And yet this is the party which William Howard Taft would have the South embrace!

In a recent speech Mr. Taft practically asserted that the people of the South are moved in their political affiliations, not by conviction following the serious study of governmental problems, but by prejudice or sectionalism or tradition, that they think one way and vote another. Mr. Taft was never more widely in error. The people of the South are Democratic because they believe that Democratic principles are best for our common country, regardless of section—for Maine as well as Texas, for Michigan as well as Georgia.

Mr. BATES. Does not the gentleman from Texas think, and does he not admit that as the southern people find the race question eliminated from politics, it is for their advantage to embrace the William Howard Taft policies and the Republican policy of protection, and was not that evidenced in the last campaign by the election of a Republican Congressman in the State of North Carolina to a seat made vacant by the resignation of Governor KITCHIN when the sole question submitted to the voters was the question of a protective tariff, and in the State of North Carolina, in a normally Democratic district, the Republican candidate won on that issue?

Mr. SHEPPARD. How about Democratic candidates who won in northern communities?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Never on that issue.

Mr. BATES. Was not that experience duplicated in the State of Missouri, when in a Democratic district a Republican candidate ran on a Republican ticket, spoke on Republican tariff policies, and because of the desire of the people to carry on the zinc industry in that district, because of their interest in the development of that industry and other interests, they elected a Republican candidate solely on the tariff proposition? These were two normal Democratic districts.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will answer the gentleman. The gentleman inquires if the South will probably not become Republican as the race issue or other issues become less important.

Mr. BATES. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Southern people were, almost without exception, Democratic before the race issue was ever dreamed of and before the civil war was even a remote possibility. There are States in the North that were solidly Democratic before the civil war, but which have been solidly Republican since. Which section has been influenced by war and prejudice?

Mr. BATES. What was the condition of labor in the South prior to the civil war?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It had no influence upon this tariff question.

Mr. BATES. With the emancipation of labor in this country, and the higher rate of wages paid to labor, is there not a steady Republican gain in all the Southern States wherever the Republican doctrines are enunciated and made generally known?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is not. I will state to the gentleman that certain States in the South were Whig States before the war. Instead of a development toward Republicanism, there has been a steady retrogression from it.

Mr. BURLESON. In that same connection I would state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that Mr. Taft in 1908 received fewer Republican votes in Texas than Mr. McKinley did in 1896, twelve years prior thereto.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And I want to state further——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to state that the gentleman's own State of Pennsylvania voted for Polk and Dallas, and Dallas cast the deciding vote in the Senate that made the tariff act of 1846 possible, under which his State prospered in the mining and coal business.

Mr. BATES. On the cry of "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of '42," and then the very man who was elected went back on his pledges.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; he carried out his pledges, and said so at the time he cast his vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me say again, that the people of the South are Democratic because they believe that Democratic principles are best for the country, regardless of section.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that Democratic Members of this House have appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, sitting at the present time, listening to tariff discussions, requesting that duties be levied on commodities that are raised in the South?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have gone over that entire subject, if the gentleman will permit. The same question was asked twenty minutes ago.

Mr. KAHN. I did not happen to be in the House at the time of the gentleman's answer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Perhaps it was the gentleman's misfortune that he was not here during my entire remarks.

I want to call further attention to this remarkable speech of Mr. Taft. In it he ridiculed the southern people for loyalty to northern Democrats, and at the same time invited them to the support of northern Republicans. Are northern Democrats any the less Americans because they are Democrats?

Do they not support the Government with their treasure and defend it with their blood? Let no man say that the Democracy and the South are not an essential part of this Republic. The hope of free government in this country lies not so much with the seven millions who won at the last election, as with the six millions who lost and accepted the result with true American good will.. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a matter of especial pride, let me say while we are on this subject of sectionalism, that the Democratic party can not succeed unless every section of the country is represented in its triumph. The side of this House most typically American is undoubtedly the Democratic side, where Members from Massachusetts and Virginia, from New York and Mississippi, from Illinois and the Carolinas, from every part of the Union, unite to advance the national good. What spectacle could more forcibly appeal to Americans everywhere than that of the famous Union general on this side, joining hands with his former antagonists of the battlefield to restore the landmarks of American liberty, wearing his 74 years like an armor of steel, ISAAC R. SHERWOOD of Ohio. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman indulge me with one further question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman will admit that there has been for some thirty years a solid South, and that in most of those States it would be hopeless to espouse any other ticket than the Democratic ticket. In most congressional elections nomination is equivalent to an election. That has never prevailed in what are called the "Northern" or the "Western" States. Almost every State of the North, East, and West is a debatable State, often electing a Democratic governor and voting for a Republican President on the same day. Was it not the desire of the President-elect, Mr. Taft, that there should be an opportunity for every man to express his preference and have that preference counted, and have it of some effect in the South as well as in the North?

Mr. SHEPPARD. And that is exactly where Mr. Taft was unjust to the South; there is every opportunity in the South for free speech and untrammeled suffrage. His speech and your remarks here encourage the belief that such is not the case.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman mean to say that he indorses a policy which makes the result of an election like a sealed book before the votes are even cast, and that no Republican party need apply——

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is not a sealed book.

Mr. BATES (continuing). And nominate their candidates as if already elected?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We invite you to come South with arguments, and if you can not meet us with arguments you ought not to complain.

Mr. BATES. The manifest desire of President-elect Taft was that there should be an opportunity, at least, for each party to present its candidates and its policy in every State and in every congressional district in this Union, if need be, and allow the people to exercise the right of franchise.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is such an opportunity, and there has always been such an opportunity, and when the gentleman speaks of a solid South I refer him to the fact that there is practically a solid North.

Mr. BATES. Oh, no. New York and Ohio have had Democratic Senators and governors every decade for the last forty years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman's argument establishes nothing so far as national elections are concerned.

Mr. BATES. And for that reason the Northern States are better governed, because there is fair chance for both parties. Even in the great State of Pennsylvania there have been Democratic governors and a treasurer elected several times in the last ten years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. How many times has Pennsylvania gone Democratic in the last forty years?

Mr. BATES. The Democrats have elected two governors in the State in the last twenty years and two or three treasurers. The term of our governors is four years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. You had two Democratic governors in the last forty years?

Mr. BATES. In the last twenty years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. You have had two Democratic governors since the war, and Texas and every other Southern State has had Republican governors since that great contest.

Mr. BATES. We elected them in the last twenty years. California has had three Democratic governors in recent years; Massachusetts also. Almost every Northern State wavers from Republicanism occasionally; but the point I make is that there is a good healthy opposition party in every Northern State and practically none in most of the Southern States. This is what Mr. Taft, in the interest of good government, seeks to have corrected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is every opportunity for any political party to express its views, formulate its platforms, and register the votes of its adherents in the South, as much so as in any other part of the country.

Mr. BATES. Minnesota has gone Democratic three times. That is all President-elect Taft desired—that there should be an opportunity presented for the candidates and for the policies of both parties or all parties not only to the people of the South, but to the people of the North as well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And he did the South an injustice when he stated that there was no such opportunity now.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman must know that in many of the Southern States there is no such opportunity.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is not the fact.

Mr. BATES. Read the reports of the Congressional Directory and you will see——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I state on my responsibility as a citizen of the country and as a citizen of the South that the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman knows that in many of the congressional districts there is no candidate in the opposition and no vote recorded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. For what reason? Not because there is no opportunity.

Mr. BATES. Just for that very fact.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman persists in doing us serious injustice.

Mr. HARDY. I wish to say that it is a strange position for a gentleman from Pennsylvania, a State that went Democratic before the war, and that has never gone Democratic in a national election since the war, to talk about the solid South.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly; and that is the statement which I made at the beginning, that before the war the South was almost wholly Democratic.

Mr. BATES. Oh, no.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And many Northern States were Democratic.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman said that they were Whig States. Tennessee and Mississippi were Whig States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I did not say the South was solidly Democratic before the war. I said that almost without exception it was Democratic.

Mr. BATES. I do not wish to do the gentleman or his section any injustice, but I do insist that the manifest desire of the President-elect was that there should be a fair presentation of the issues of the Republican and Democratic parties before all the people of this country, in every State in the Union and every portion of every State in the Union, in the interest of fair play and to enable the people of this country to vote for their best interests, as they believed. He advised this without reference to any party at all or without intimating which party they should espouse.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I say again that entire opportunity exists to-day, and has always existed, for the fair and unprejudiced presentation of issues in the South. My people are as liberal, as tolerant, and as patriotic as any other people in the world.

Mr. BATES. Then there is an improvement over the conditions of twenty or thirty years ago.

Mr. HARDY. Has there been any improvement in Pennsylvania? Is not Pennsylvania a part of the solid North?

Mr. BATES. There is no district in Pennsylvania that does not present opposition candidates, and in many of them the elections are carried by only two to five thousand majority. Several districts alternate between the two parties even on national questions.

Mr. HARDY. Was not Pennsylvania Democratic before the war, and has she ever been since the war?

Mr. BATES. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Has she ever elected a Democratic governor?

Mr. BATES. She did in 1900.

Mr. HARDY. Except when there was some local issue of corruption or something of that kind?

Mr. BATES. On national issues I am proud to say that she has always gone Republican.

Mr. HARDY. Is she, therefore, to be blamed on that account?

Mr. BATES. And I wish to say, further, that as long as the people of Pennsylvania retain their good sense, they will vote the Republican ticket on national questions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY. Then, do we understand that they had no good sense before the war?

Mr. BATES. They have improved in their attitude on national questions.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The good sense you refer to is cents in the pocket and not sense in the head, is it not? [Laughter.]

Mr. BATES. Both. They have improved intellectually, morally, and financially. "Go thou and do likewise." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. The people of the South will be guided by their convictions, and I desire to emphasize the fact that Mr. Taft did the South a serious injustice when he insinuated that fair opportunity did not exist for the exercise of the suffrage in the South.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I think the fairness that Mr. Taft was talking about not existing in the South was in the Republican conventions down there. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, the people of the South are devoted to the Democracy not alone for the soundness of its economic and constitutional tenets. They love the Democracy because it is essentially a national party. I referred a few moments ago to General SHERWOOD; let me say further that his speech in this Congress against the militarism of the Republican party has been quoted with approval by d'Estonnelles de Constant in the Senate of France. Only a short space away from General SHERWOOD sits the Confederate brigadier, the noted GORDON, of Tennessee, and when SHERWOOD and GORDON, veteran heroes of opposing factions in one of the bloodiest conflicts of time, meet under Democratic standards in the American Congress, who will deny that the Democracy is the supreme refuge of a reconciled and devoted people? [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Resting on the universal principle of equal rights, the Democratic party is the party of the Nation, the party of brotherhood. The ambition that illumines its entire career is to make this Government so just, so pure, that it shall say to the humblest toiler in the land, "You shall not build and another inhabit; you shall not plant and another eat." When we contemplate the character and record of the Republican party we can not avoid the conclusion that it is too strongly in the grasp of the interests it has enthroned to provide substantial remedies for the people's ills, to make sincere and adequate revision of the tariff, or to restore our lost supremacy in the commerce of the world. From the beginning of its partnership with protected wealth the Republican party has drifted away from the sympathy and brotherhood that marked the aspirations of Abraham Lincoln. To-day it openly proclaims loyalty to Alexander Hamilton, the disciple of privilege and class rule, the champion of aristocratic tendencies, who regarded the British monarchy as the model system of the world. It would be difficult to conceive of two more contradictory schools of political thought, two ideals of government more antagonistic, than those of Alexander Hamilton and Abraham Lincoln.

Indeed, Lincoln accepted the doctrines of Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic party and the fundamental antagonist of Hamilton. In reply to an invitation from Boston in April, 1859, to attend a celebration in honor of Jefferson's birthday, Lincoln concluded as follows:

> All honor to Jefferson, to the man who in the concrete pressure of a struggle for national independence by a single people had the coolness, forecast, and capacity to introduce into a merely revolutionary document an abstract truth, applicable to all men and all times, and so to embalm it there that to-day and in all coming days it shall be a rebuke and a stumbling block to the very harbingers of reappearing tyranny and oppression.

Sublimer tribute never fell from human lips. [Applause.] Such was Lincoln's estimate of the man whom Roosevelt ridicules and DALZELL decries. I can not find that Lincoln cared enough for Hamilton's political views to attempt a single public analysis of them. It is not possible that Alexander Hamilton and Abraham Lincoln could be the founders of the same political party. Hamilton was for the class; Lincoln for the mass. As the Republican party becomes more and more the party of Alexander Hamilton it becomes less and less the party of Abraham Lincoln. If the notable speech of last February by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the most ingenious defense of the Republican party delivered in recent years, establishes anything, it establishes the fact that Hamilton is regarded by the Republican party as its doctrinal founder.

Through its alliance with privilege, the Republican party now reflects the principles of Hamilton; purified by fifty years of heroic struggle, the Democratic party to-day embodies the teachings of Jefferson, whose ideals were the ideals of Lincoln. Our leader in three national contests, reflecting these ideals in life and thought and speech, representing the purest type of American manhood, is greater in defeat than the Titan of the golf links in victory. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] His is a higher place in history than official honors can ever bestow. And, oh, sir, when the American people shall lift the party of brotherhood above the party of dollarhood, the party of equality above the party of privilege, the party of progressive trade relations above the party of restriction, the party of economy above the party of extravagance, the party of local self-government above the party of centralization, the party of the Nation above the party of a section, then, and not till then, shall we witness the rebirth of this Republic on a basis as broad as human patriotism, as deep as human love, the reconsecration of 85,000,000 American citizens to the doctrines that established liberty, the return to original paths and principles of that rejoicing host whose arms shall rise in mighty unison to "break the jaws of the wicked, and from between his teeth to take away the prey." [Loud and prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the impression prevails that this Congress will not pass any appropriation bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and, if true, I desire here and now to record my emphatic protest against such a policy.

We are advised or led to infer that the revenues of the Government are at this time not sufficient to justify this expenditure. I admit that the country is to-day confronted by an annual deficit of perhaps $140,000,000, due to the unparalleled extravagance of this Congress; but it is most unfortunate for the district that I represent, and I believe for the general good of the whole country, that the necessity for economy in the expenditures of the public money should be discovered just in time to defeat or to defer action upon a bill for the improvement of our waterways.

It may seem presumptuous and even unbecoming in me as a new Member, and one with a brief tenure of office, to attempt to criticise the actions of this Congress, and it is not my purpose to do so in an unfriendly or a disrespectful way, but I represent one of the largest and most populous districts represented in this House, and one that is deeply interested in the question of river improvements, and I can not be true to my own convictions, nor faithful to the interests of my constituents, without expressing upon this floor my disapproval of the indefinite postponement of such legislation, especially in view of the fact that this Congress, as I understand, bases such action upon insufficient revenues, which was brought about by its own extravagance.

This Congress has appropriated, or will appropriate, for other purposes more than two thousand million dollars, which is far in excess of the appropriations of any preceding Congress in the history of the country, and of this enormous expenditure I beg to remind you that over eight hundred million is, or will be, for the support of the military arm of the Government.

No one with the same power and opportunity will go further than I in upholding the honor of our country, nor in providing the necessary means for its defense, whenever its integrity as a nation is assailed or the safety of its citizens is imperiled by foreign foes; but I love more the paths of peace, with their benevolence and achievements, than I do the bloody battlefields of war, with their brutality and sacrifice of human lives. We are now at peace with all the world, for which let God be praised, and for my part I hope, with some confidence of its fruition, that the time will soon come when all the disputes between civilized nations will be amicably adjusted by a court of international arbitration, or other civil methods, instead of by the arbitrament of the sword. I have but little sympathy with the oft-repeated quotation made by those who favor extravagant appropriations for increased battle ships or large standing armies, "In time of peace prepare for war." It would be more in harmony with my own feelings and ambitions and more in keeping with our advancing civilization and the Christian spirit of the age to say, "In time of war prepare for peace."

More than 200 miles of the district that I represent borders upon the Mississippi River, and within the interior of that district is found the St. Francis River, Black River, Current River, and Little River, all navigable in law, and with proper protection and improvement by the Government would be navigable in fact, and the benefits enjoyed by the fertile sections through which they run and the benefits contributed to the commerce of the country would be far in excess of the necessary expenditure.

The construction of the Panama Canal, which we are promised will be completed within six years, makes the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries of more vital importance to the country than ever before. About 65 per cent of our exports to foreign lands, averaged for the last eighteen years, have been the products of the farm, and about two-thirds of this, as nearly as can be ascertained, were produced in the Mississippi Valley. That fertile section has sometimes been called "the granary of the world." The farmers of that valley produce annually a large surplus of cotton and grain that are required to feed and clothe the inhabitants of the other parts of the world, and next in importance to the producing of these commodities is the facilities for transporting them to the place of consumption. Water transportation is the cheapest known to our commercial life, and the cheapest railroad rates known to shippers are between water competing points.

For these reasons I favor a complete and a comprehensive plan of improved waterways navigation, including a deep channel from the Lakes to the Gulf, if feasible, and I understand the government engineers have so decided. I hope that many of my constituents will live to see the day that their cotton, corn, and wheat, and other products of the soil, will be loaded along our own borders in vessels destined without change to all the ports of the civilized world.

To me it sometimes seems that the action of the Government toward its navigable rivers is not consistent. In the district that I now have the honor to represent are a number of rivers that are in law navigable, but which have been so neglected by the Government that navigation upon them has been very much impeded, and in many cases practically suspended; among them the St. Francis River, upon which I recently traveled more than 100 miles within my own district by steamboat, on a tour of inspection with a board of commissioners appointed by the governor of the State of Missouri. I made this personal tour of inspection at the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. BURTON], for whom I have the highest regard. I at that time hoped to report the facts to the committee over which he presides at this session of Congress in support of a bill introduced by me, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of that river; but, as I now understand there will probably be no river bill reported or passed at this session of Congress, my efforts in that matter will, I fear, be of no avail.

This river, with an expenditure of a very reasonable sum of money, could be cleaned out and its channel improved so as to be made navigable at nearly all seasons of the year, thereby furnishing a much-needed means of transportation for a large and fertile territory. The Government will not permit the construction of bridges across that river by individuals or corporations without its express sanction, on the ground that it would be an obstruction and an interference with navigation; still it was practically abandoned in the last Congress, when that district was represented by my predecessor, Mr. Tyndall, by incorporating in the rivers and harbors bill a section discontinuing all appropriations for that river in Missouri and repealing all laws providing for its improvement.

At the last session of this Congress, at the urgent request of my constituents living along and near the James River, I succeeded in getting passed by this House a bill authorizing the construction of a dam in that river so as to utilize the water power, to the great advantage of that locality in developing its latent resources and adding to its wealth. A short time thereafter the President, by special message to Congress, announced that he was opposed to that character of legislation, and indicated that he would not give his approval to any bills of that sort without they expressly reserved the right of the Government to tax the use of the water power. His opposition delayed the consideration and passage of that bill in the Senate, but it passed that body two days ago and is now in the hands of the President. I hope and believe that when he fully understands all of the facts in connection with that river that he will give this bill his approval. James River is wholly within the State of Missouri; not a drop of water flows through that stream that does not come from the districts represented by my colleague, Mr. HAMLIN, and myself. It is a rapidly running mountain stream and is not navigable, except to float downstream at certain seasons of the year, which may be done with great rapidity.

The Government never did expend a cent upon this river, and it is safe to say it never will, and hence I do not particularly appreciate its deep concern over its welfare or its disposition to control the use of its water. In my opinion it should belong to the abutting landowners or be controlled by the State.

The appropriations heretofore made by Congress for the Mississippi, from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio, have not been commensurate with the necessities of that important stretch of the river. It has been urged as a reason for reducing the appropriations for that part of the river that the tonnage transported over it has grown less. The same character of reasoning would forbid the administering of remedies to an afflicted man who by reason of disease is unable to render full service. If the channel of that river were improved, and its capacity for navigation thereby increased, the freight tonnage over it would also be largely increased.

It is something like the story of the Dutchman's wife, who was sick and placed in a hospital. The Dutchman called on Monday morning to inquire of her condition, and was informed that she was improving, and again on Tuesday morning and Wednesday morning, and on all occasions was informed that she was improving, but when upon inquiry on Thursday morning he was informed that she was dead he went over to the nearest saloon to "drown his sorrow in the cup." Inviting his friends about him to drink with him, he said, "My vife is dead." They asked him the trouble, and he said, "My vife tied of imbrovements." [Laughter.]

The appropriations for the Mississippi River from St. Louis to Cairo have been so meager and inadequate that, almost like the Dutchman's wife, it has died of improvements.

Since a Member of Congress, at the request of constituents deeply interested in that part of the river, I have urged upon the proper authorities the importance of improvements for the protection of caving banks, and to prevent the destruction of levees, and threatened cut-offs, all of which would be for the better maintenance of the channel and the protection of navigation. The reply has invariably been that the work was badly needed, but that there was insufficient funds, or no funds, available for that purpose. Within the last year serious damages have been done, and greater damages are now threatened, by caving banks, not only to private property but to public levees, and to state and interstate commerce. At Prices Landing, where about $30,000 was expended a few years ago in revetment, with splendid effect, and with great benefit, it is now being destroyed by reason of caving banks around and behind either end of the improvement, which could be protected with a small expenditure.

At Birds Point, where great quantities of interstate freight has been handled by means of transfer boats, the terminus of two railroads—the Iron Mountain and Cotton Belt—about 20 acres of land has gone into the river within the last eight months. The inclines, depot grounds, terminal yards, and tracks of both railroads have been destroyed, and a great part of the town washed away. The public has suffered great inconvenience by the interference with the ordinary means of travel, and the United States mails and interstate commerce have been greatly interrupted and delayed. The damages sustained by the Iron Mountain Railroad alone at that place has been $125,000, as the following letter from Mr. C. S. Clark, vice-president of that company, will show:

ST. LOUIS, December 9, 1908.

Hon. J. J. RUSSELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant, addressed to our superintendent, has been referred to me.

Our company is interested to the same extent as other property owners in preventing further erosion, and the consequent damage resulting therefrom, at Birds Point, and is ready and willing to join the other property owners and interests affected in taking whatever steps may appear to be desirable or necessary to secure government aid.

Our facilities at Birds Point have practically been destroyed, entailing a loss to our company of over $125,000, and we have been forced to make our transfers from another point, which involves a delay of approximately one day to interstate freight handled.

I trust that the meeting at Washington may be attended with favorable results, and desire to thank you for the interest which you have manifested.

Yours, truly,

C. S. CLARKE,
Vice-President St. L., I. M. & S. Ry.

When, at my request, last summer the government engineers made a tour of inspection of that part of the river, they called the attention of the Representative of the Cairo district in this House, Mr. THISTLEWOOD, and myself, to a threatened cut-off through what is known as Big Lake Bayou. The engineers all agreed that this was a grave problem and that such a result would not only very seriously affect the channel of the river and its navigation by greatly shortening the river and increasing the current, but by turning the mouth of the cut-off directly opposite and fronting the Illinois banks at Cairo with increased velocity and force the current would be a serious menace to that growing and important commercial center.

At the cities of New Madrid and Caruthersville the Government a few years ago did some very necessary and useful work in protecting the river banks of these important commercial cities, but I am advised that further work is now necessary for additional protection and to save from destruction or damage the work already done. Upon that point I ask to read the following letter from the mayor of New Madrid, Mo., Doctor O'Bannon:

NEW MADRID, MO., December 24, 1908.

Hon. J. J. RUSSELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RUSSELL: Your favor of the 24th instant received.

The work already done needs protection—that is, the top of the bank needs to be rocked, as the high water during strong winds cuts away that part of the bank above the point reached by the rock.

The bank just above the revetment, or where rocks stop, and just below the mouth of the St. Johns Bayou, is caving, and will, we fear, in time cut in behind the rock, thereby seriously endangering the whole of the work already done. The cause of this bank caving at this point is on account of the current of the river from the Kentucky point striking at this point.

My judgment is that what is most needed at this time is this additional work, for, as above stated, this caving endangers the work already done.

Yours, very truly,

WELTON O'BANNON,
Mayor of the City of New Madrid.

I have importuned the Mississippi River Commission for relief against these erosions, actual and threatened, and while the necessity is not questioned, the reply, as usual, is "no available funds." I ask to have read and included as a part of my remarks a part of a letter from Colonel Bixby, the president of the Mississippi River Commission:

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 30, 1908.

Hon. J. J. RUSSELL,
Charleston, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Yours of November 20 is duly at hand, regarding the work which you think is desirable in the St. Francis basin from Cape Girardeau down to Cairo.

The work between Big Bayou and Thompsons Landing can not properly come under the Mississippi River Commission, but must be handled by my river and harbor district (formerly under Lieutenant-Colonel Casey), which has the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio, for the reason that the levee systems which the Mississippi River Commission can control from Cairo up to Cape Girardeau, as it would be located by the commission, must necessarily disregard the land in any loop such as that at Thompsons Point and must go back from the river far enough to get entirely back of Big Lake and entirely back of all the other bayous and sloughs between Cairo and Commerce.

The St. Louis river and harbor district, controlling the Mississippi River from the Missouri to the Ohio, might possibly consider the protection of Thompsons Point in order to prevent a cut-off; but its funds are so limited by the recent acts of Congress that it can only spend a few thousand dollars a year on bank protection and cut-off protection, and the small amount left for bank work at the end of the season is nowhere near enough to maintain existing works, so that any existing appropriations for the Mississippi River between St. Louis and Cairo must go into other work than bank work down at Thompsons Point.

and I can do nothing in this direction until Congress makes special appropriations for this particular locality.

Possibly you can help on such work by getting the next Congress to insert in its river and harbor bill a special provision for an "examination of the Mississippi River from Philadelphia Point to Greenfield Landing, with a view to preventing a cut-off into Big Lake or across Thompsons Point," adding any other feature of the work which you think necessary. This will have to be special work, all by itself, and will require special mention in the last paragraph (that for examination and surveys) in the next river and harbor bill. I think you will have no great difficulty in having such provision inserted in that paragraph. But the examination can not be made and reported before the present Congress adjourns, and so, even with a favorable report, you could not get any actual appropriation before the session of 1909–10. Yet this is about all you can do under the present practice of Congress and of its River and Harbor Committee.

The Mississippi River Commission in its last annual report recommended $3,000,000 for its use in 1909, and the present prospects are that this will be cut down in Washington to $2,000,000. If so, your neighborhood will stand little chance of getting any work done in 1909. Your chances would be far better if you could persuade Congress to add the extra $1,000,000 recommended by the commission; but this will require a special item to that effect in the river and harbor bill of this session.

Regretting that other urgent work has delayed my answer,

Very truly, yours,

W. H. BIXBY,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army;
President Mississippi River Commission;
Also Officer in Charge River and Harbor District,
Mouth of Missouri to Mouth of Ohio.

If these improvements are such as are proper for the Government to make—and about that there seems to be no dispute—then I submit that they should be made promptly, not only as a protection to private property, but for the protection of the navigation of the river and the commerce of the country. I know that there are those who hold that the General Government can not properly appropriate money to prevent the caving of banks when nothing is involved but the loss of private property, but I insist that if the Government has the power to spend its money to dig dirt out of the river to improve the channel, it has the right to spend money to prevent dirt from falling into the river that will fill up the channel.

I do not assume to be in any sense an expert upon this question, but I do venture to give it as my own opinion that the only way to open and successfully and permanently maintain at a reasonable expense a 14-foot channel from St. Louis to the Gulf will be to stop the caving in of acres of land, by revetment or other permanent structures.

It has been the hope of all the people of my section that this Congress would appropriate the money necessary to enable the proper authorities to enter upon the prosecution of a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The importance of these waterways have in the recent past been better understood and more appreciated than formerly.

The proposition of river improvement is to-day favored by all political parties and the majority of leaders among public men. At the Deep Waterways convention, in Chicago, a few weeks before the late presidential election, I heard both of the candidates of the two leading political parties in that contest—Mr. Taft, now President-elect, and Mr. Bryan—express favorable opinions of the justice and importance of such improvements.

The platforms of both the Republican and Democratic parties also strongly favored the improvement of our waterways. I read the following extract from the Republican platform:

In the line of this splendid undertaking is the future duty equally imperative to enter upon a systematic improvement upon a large and comprehensive plan, just to all persons of the country, of the waterways, harbors, and Great Lakes, whose natural adaptability to the increasing traffic of the land is one of the greatest gifts of benign Providence.

The Democratic platform, from which I also read an extract, was even stronger and more insistent, as follows:

Water furnishes the cheaper means of transportation, and the National Government, having the control of navigable waters, should improve them to their fullest capacity. We earnestly favor the immediate adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for improving every water course in the Union which is justified by the needs of commerce, and to secure that end we favor, when practicable, the connection of the Great Lakes with the navigable rivers and with the Gulf through the Mississippi River.

The trip of President Roosevelt down the Mississippi River in October, 1907, we hoped would give new impetus to the cause of river transportation and river improvements. This great flotilla of 18 boats, parading from St. Louis to Memphis in orderly procession, was the most imposing spectacle ever witnessed in the history of Mississippi River navigation. The President, in one of his speeches on that trip, spoke of our inland waterways as one of the greatest assets of the nation, and expressed the opinion that they should be well and promptly improved. Since that time he has frequently urged Congress, by his messages, to provide at once for their improvement, and in his message at the opening of this Congress he said:

Action should be begun forthwith during the present session of Congress for the improvement of our inland waterways, action which will result in giving us not only navigable but navigated rivers.

Mr. Chairman, my constituents are deeply interested and deeply concerned in the matter of the improvement of these rivers, and as they are annually producing a large surplus of cotton and grain, desired for food and raiment by others, they, too, as consumers, are interested in facilitating the means of distribution. Facility of transportation stimulates production, and increased production promotes the welfare of mankind and adds to the wealth of the world.

In behalf of my constituents and the great army of industrious farmers and producers of the Mississippi Valley, and for the good of the whole people and the commerce of the country, I respectfully urge this Congress to give prompt and favorable consideration to this vital question—the immediate and adequate improvement of our internal waterways. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13649. An act providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7721. An act for payment to Robert B. Whitacre and Frederick T. Hildred the sum of $944.97 for blasting powder used by the United States Government to complete the Belle Fourche irrigation project;

S. 6586. An act to correct the military record of Charles J. Smith;

S. 1197. An act setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo.; and

S. 556. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,' approved February 26, 1895," approved June 27, 1906.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of lands at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] this morning devoted some time to the enumeration of the various benefits which have accrued to this House under the Reed rules. So far as I know, no one to-day denies the beneficial results consequent on the abolition of the untrammeled obstruction which previously was so common. The gentleman pointed out to us that those great reforms were instituted in order to prevent that obstruction, and, furthermore, that under the Reed rules the order of business was completely changed. I myself believe that the Reed reforms were beneficial in almost every way; but when the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, the Reed rules, are the rules of this Congress to-day, he is utterly and entirely mistaken. The rules of this House are not alone those 45 sections which we see in the manual. The decisions of this House and of its Speakers also go to make up our body of parliamentary law. Since the time of the adoption of the Reed rules the decisions of the Speaker have modified our parliamentary law to a degree that the Members do not appreciate.

I called the attention of the House this morning to the fact that under the Reed rules any committee had a right to move to suspend the rules and by a majority vote—not a two-thirds vote—set a day for the consideration of any measure which they chose. I could see that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was saying to himself:

Yes, if the Speaker admitted the motion; but not otherwise.

I grant that that is true, but, nevertheless, at the time the Reed rules were adopted Members believed that a privilege was conferred on committees in permitting them, by a majority instead of by a two-thirds vote, to secure a day for action. I wish to read to the Chair and to the Members from the book which I hold in my hand. It contains a discussion of the reasons for the adoption of the Reed rules. Listen to this:

Rule XXVIII, relating to suspension of rules, is so modified that the House, at the request of a committee, may, by a majority vote, set down a bill for action of the House.

Mr. Chairman, such was the explanation given for the change in Rule XXVIII. Surely at the time Members were justified in supposing that the privilege accorded was real and not imaginary. I am perfectly aware that many of you might say:

Why, on the floor of this House Members often make explanations which later are found to be illusory.

Any Member may arise and interpret a rule incorrectly, it is true, but that which I read you was no unauthorized comment. That statement was made in the report of the member of the Committee on Rules who reported the Reed rules to the House, the Representative from Danville, Ill. Valuable or not, the privilege I have just been discussing has been dropped from our code.

Now, as to this question of the rules being changed by decisions. Speaker Reed, unless I am very much mistaken, invariably held, when the Committee on Rules reported a rule to the House, that after the previous question was ordered it was then in order to move to recommit with instructions. Just think of the value of that power which the House had under the Reed rules while Mr. Reed was the Speaker. We have it no longer. It is not the rule of the House to-day. Mr. Speaker Henderson discarded the Reed ruling, and he has been followed by the present Speaker. It is no longer possible to recommit with instructions of any sort after the previous question has been ordered on a report from the Committee on Rules. Perhaps some one will say: "But if you have the majority vote to recommit, you have also the majority vote to refuse the previous question." Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; Members may vote the previous question up or down without leaving a legible trace on their records. The significance of that motion does not appear on the surface. The ordinary citizen does not understand its effect. On the other hand, if a Member votes down a motion to recommit with definite instructions, the fact stands in his record. He must explain it, if he can.

I have just shown you one example, perhaps the most important, of the way in which the hands of the Speaker and of the Committee on Rules have been strengthened since the days of Speaker Reed. Now, I will show you another. It was held in the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and again in the first session of this Congress, that the motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill is not divisible. Yet the rules say distinctly that any Member may demand the division of a question if, when that question is divided, a substantive proposition remains. That would be a very valuable privilege, if we only had it. So far as I know—although I have heard it stated to the contrary—the decisions of this question in this Congress and in the last rest on nothing better than some doubtful rulings about forty years old; decisions, by the way, which only considered whether or not it was in order to demand the division of the propositions presented, not whether the motion itself was separable.

Since the adopting of the Reed rules, if I am not mistaken, the functions of the Committee on Rules have been widely extended, while the committee itself has been further protected by the adoption of a clause which now appears at the end of paragraph 61, Rule XI.

The examination of all the precedents presents such a stupendous task that I hesitate to state for a certainty that which I believe to be a fact, namely, that only very recently has the Committee on Rules held it to be within their province to report a rule making an amendment in order which, under the rules and practice of the House, is clearly out of order. With the same hesitation I state it as my belief that Speaker Reed would have declined to admit, under suspension of the rules, any order making it possible on a future day, not a suspension day, to suspend the rules in order to attain some particular purpose.

I believe it is an entirely new practice for a Speaker to hold that the question of consideration may be dilatory, although a decision to that effect is noted in the Digest as having been made in the Fifty-third Congress. I think the citation is incorrect. Perhaps I should not criticise this decision, however, as I am afraid that in my ignorance I have voted to sustain it.

It is useless to go further in citing changes in the Reed rules wrought by decisions. I think I have said enough to throw some doubt on the correctness of the view that we are now acting substantially under those rules.

Now, a word about the growth of the practice of moving the previous question. Again and again we are told that no man should speak to the House without its consent, and that the previous question is a beneficent motion to stop debate. Formerly that motion was adopted for the purpose of curtailing debate, and in England to-day on the rare occasions when the speaker entertains it, such is its purpose. In this House, however, nowadays the chief function of the motion is to prevent awkward amendments.

Formerly the theory was that a special report from the Committee on Rules was introduced in order to facilitate the discussion of a measure. To-day over and over again a report from the Committee on Rules is—I do not say intentionally—so framed as to limit debate on a measure of great importance and, what is still more undesirable, to limit amendment.

I come now to the question of catching the Speaker's eye.

Mr. KEIFER. Before passing from that, I understand your criticism is upon the House, which constituted the Committee on Rules, in limiting debate. Is that objectionable, or is that to be avoided?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it certainly is to be avoided, and it certainly is objectionable that a rule should be adopted limiting to three hours the consideration of a great measure like the bill to reorganize the whole immigration laws of the United States, to say nothing of the fact that the rule in question permitted amendment and debate on only 2 of the 41 sections of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me, then, to suggest the lecture ought to be delivered to the Members of the House in not voting to lengthen debate and not a protest against the rules or the Speaker.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Did not the gentleman himself yesterday introduce a resolution changing the rules so as to permit the previous question in the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. He did.

Mr. OLMSTED. After forty minutes' debate.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. He introduced a rule that will compel this House to stay in session at certain times, just as the House of Commons of Great Britain is forced to do.

Mr. OLMSTED. Whether it wants to or not?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; just exactly so.

Mr. OLMSTED. I simply want to ask whether your resolution in regard to the previous question would not apply to that immigration bill after forty' minutes debate?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I did not catch the question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would not this rule you proposed, if adopted, authorize the previous question to be called in the Committee of the Whole House, or in the whole House, on the immigration bill of which you have spoken after forty minutes of debate?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Only once a week.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, whenever it comes up.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Not if it came up under the rule——

Mr. OLMSTED. But when it did come up.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Only once a week.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman will yield for as many questions as he can have time to answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that the Committee on Rules could bring in any rule which would be enforceable unless approved by a majority of the Members of the House?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; he does not; but it has always been held in legislative bodies that propositions shall not be presented in such a form that Members must choose between two evils and take the lesser, but that the Chamber shall have the right to amend a measure in any way it sees fit. In that way, and in that way only, may measures be reduced to suitable shape. Such is the whole essence of the doctrine of amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Would not a majority of the membership of the House have the right to repudiate a rule recommended by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A majority of the House would undoubtedly have the right to repudiate it; but they might not wish to repudiate, whereas, if the opportunity arose, they might amend it. I am not aware that I have said anything that would lead any gentleman to think anything to the contrary.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say the Committee on Rules forced the House to act.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that in modern practice the Committee on Rules forces the House to act without reasonable opportunity for amendment on a proposition which it presents and on which it asks for an answer, yes or no. Under Speaker Reed's rulings it was in order for the House to move to recommit, with instructions, a report from the Committee on Rules even after the previous question was ordered. In that way Members might be put on record before their constituents. To be sure, you may say that if the House wishes to amend a report from the Committee on Rules the previous question may be voted down. But how can the House tell whether it wishes to amend or not until it has heard an amendment suggested? Debate is allowed for less than an hour, and the entire control of the time rests with the Committee on Rules. The Reed rules were adopted in no such fashion. Each rule was voted on separately, and full opportunity for amendment was accorded.

Now, a word with regard to the eye of the Speaker. I quite agree that there has been a great deal of loose criticism with regard to this matter. I have never, so far as I can remember, been to the Speaker and asked for leave to move to suspend the rules.

I have, however, asked to be recognized for unanimous consent. Formerly I inclined to the belief that the Speaker has the same right to deny unanimous consent as has any other Member of the House. I do not to-day feel so sure of the fact. Unquestionably he has the right to deny unanimous consent if he stands in his place and says so. I do not think that any Member or group of Members who are anxious to deny unanimous consent, but do not wish to arise and say so, should be protected by the Speaker. Certainly they should not be protected in such a way that the fact does not appear in the RECORD. In the Journal I believe that the name of the Member objecting need not appear; but such is not necessarily the case in the RECORD.

I am perfectly in accord with those gentlemen who say that there will be unlimited confusion if you try to take from the Speaker the right of recognition, or if, as was the old plan, an appeal were admitted on the question of recognition. I have never known the present Speaker to deny me the right to recognition, provided I had a privileged motion to present. No Member should for an instant submit without the strongest protest, if recognition is denied him when he wishes to offer a privileged matter or a motion accorded precedence under the rules.

I have never undertaken to go to the Speaker and ask him for recognition under such circumstances, nor need anyone else do so. I have first ascertained whether I had or had not a superior right to anyone else who might claim recognition, and I have always found that the Speaker would recognize me or deny me recognition in accordance with the practice of this House, if not in accordance with the theory of parliamentary law. With regard to all those motions for which more than one man has an equal right to recognition, no system, in my opinion, can be devised which will with propriety take from the Speaker the power of deciding between the claimants.

Now, as to the motion to suspend the rules. In that regard the right of the Speaker to deny recognition is based on a long series of rulings. There is no time under the rules as they stand when it is unqualifiedly in order to move to suspend the rules—not one single moment. We are always faced with an order of business, and nowhere in that order of business can be found authority for such a motion. By implication it is held that the Speaker may entertain the motion at certain times; but the rules are silent on this point beyond forbidding him, except on Monday and during the last six days of the session, to entertain a motion to suspend the rules. So it is held that at the times just specified he may entertain the motion if he see fit.

Personally, I believe the practice regarding suspension has been unjust for nearly a quarter of a century. I do not believe that such an opportunity for discrimination between measures should be given to any Speaker. Yet, under Speaker Carlisle and Speaker Randall, and under every recent Speaker, including, no doubt, the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], it has always been held that the rules give no man the right to make a motion to suspend the rules, and that therefore it is optional on Mondays and on the last six days of the session whether or not the Speaker shall entertain the motion. While I believe that this rule ought to be entirely changed, for the reason that it is unequal and gives the Speaker too much power, yet I am not one of those who think that he does not lawfully possess the power of discrimination at the present speaking.

Mr. KEIFER. On that point, if the gentleman will allow me—and I am not controverting his proposition—I want to state that formerly motions to suspend the rules were made by Members in the order in which they got on the list that was kept by the Speaker's clerk; and when he made the motion, he made a motion to suspend the rules on any bill or matter that he saw fit, and it was not a question of disclosing in advance what his motion was to relate to.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Precisely. I am very glad that the gentleman called the attention of the Members to that fact. With regard to the opportunity for debate, I have never heard any serious criticism to the effect that there is not plenty of time allowed. I have, however, often heard the criticism that sufficient time for debate is not allowed except on matters not before the House. I know there is plenty of time to debate any question that is not before the House, but the difficulty is to get time to debate contentious matters at a time when debate will count.

Of those who defend the present rules of the House there are two groups of men. One group absolutely denies that the Speaker has the autocratic power which I maintain that he possesses, and the other group holds that, as the chosen representative of the majority party, he ought to be clothed with power, and that it is quite just and proper that he should exercise it. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has taken the position that the Speaker, as a matter of fact, is not clothed with autocratic power, I shall discuss this question in opposition to that contention. I shall not only try to show that the Speaker possesses autocratic power, but I shall also point out the particular rules, decisions, and practices under which he is empowered to exercise it.

Generally speaking, I believe that this power arises out of the Speaker's great control over the order of business, a control so complete that he can leave any highly contentious measure pending on the calendar at the time of adjournment.

Every Member of this House knows how a bill is introduced. Every Member knows how it is left to a committee. Every Member knows how it comes out of committee and goes to the calendar, there to await its turn for consideration, if, perchance, that turn ever comes. But not all Members of the House clearly understand the part that privileged legislation plays in blocking the way to attempts to get any given bill off the calendar. When I say "any given bill," I mean any given contentious bill, on which a considerable number, if not a majority, of the Members do not wish to go on record.

There are two principal rules of this House which give privilege to legislative proposals. The first rule is contained in clause 61 of Rule XI and the other in clause 9 of Rule XVI. Certain classes of business are privileged under Rule XI, while appropriation bills and revenue bills are given higher privilege under Rule XVI.

In an attempt to elucidate this complicated matter of privilege I shall speak of conditions as they have obtained in the last six years. Conditions have been somewhat different this session. The calendar has been surprisingly easy of access, for the very good reason that there is not now nor has there been on the calendar a single bill of such an awkward nature as to make its consideration embarrassing to any of us. The present state of affairs is by no means normal, and for that reason I shall depict the state of affairs which has prevailed during the six previous years of my membership in this body.

The rule of daily procedure provides that when the sixth order of business is reached there shall be a call of the calendar, and that at the end of another hour the seventh order of business may be reached on a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider unprivileged matters. Until this session, I have never except once known that seventh order of business to be reached. On that single occasion a certain agricultural bill, brought in by Mr. Adams of Wisconsin, was considered and passed, but most of the time for debate was occupied with the discussion of an entirely different subject. The reason why awkward measures on the calendar can not be reached is this: All important, highly contentious bills, bills that Members strongly favor or oppose, can easily be delayed in committee. Even if I am a minority of only one in the committee, I can ask for hearings on a bill, or I may employ other legitimate methods of delay, with the result that the session is far advanced before that bill comes out of committee and takes its place on the calendar. Meanwhile many a privileged matter has been reported, and the calendar is already choked with unimportant or unopposed bills which enjoy no privilege.

General appropriation bills, too, are fast coming in. There are a dozen of them at every session, and they take up an infinite amount of time, what with general debate and also with debate and amendment under the five-minute rule. While one appropriation bill is being discussed there is generally another ready to claim the next chance for consideration, and thus a procession of privileged bills results in the shutting out of all opportunity to reach unprivileged matters. Once in a while, at the end of a session—for instance, at the end of the first session of the last Congress—when all appropriations have been dealt with, when we are waiting for the Senate to act or waiting for the completion of the work of engrossment, a time comes when it would seem to be appropriate to go to the calendar for some of this unprivileged business patiently awaiting our attention.

What happened when this situation presented itself in 1906? There was then on the calendar an unimportant bill with regard to custom-houses. It had nothing to do with the raising of revenue; but under an old decision it was clothed with privilege, and so it served its purpose. It was taken off the calendar and all the spare time remaining was exhausted in general debate upon that bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Always.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would it not have been in order for the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he desired, to say to the Speaker, "I raise the question of consideration." Whereupon the Speaker would have said, "The question is, Will the House consider the bill?" and then the House consider it, or go to the calendar.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Precisely. I am coming to that later. Naturally, I had anticipated that some one would point out the possibility of raising the question of consideration.

So far as I know, there was no attempt made to pass that bill either then or since—no real attempt, I mean. I am not absolutely certain of the fact, for, unfortunately, I was not here in the last part of the last session, but a hasty inspection of the Journal leads me to suppose that I am correct. The only purpose which was served in calling that bill from the calendar at that particular time at the end of the session, if I am not mistaken, was that of providing a "blocking" measure.

Now I come to the difficulty just raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania: First, I should like to ask him whether the matter which he filed this morning at the end of his address was an article on the rules prepared by Mr. Asher C. Hinds, and published in part in various papers about a month ago?

Mr. OLMSTED. The same one.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hinds was kind enough to give me a complete copy of that article. As it has now become a matter of record, I can best meet the difficulties of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no difficulties.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I meant his objection recently raised. I can best meet it by discussing the article of which I speak. Mr. Hinds claims that when a majority of the House really wishes to reach any measure on the calendar, no matter how much privileged business intervenes, all that is required is to vote down the consideration of intervening matters. He even pointed out, what is perfectly true, that this very step has been successfully taken in the past. The last time that the attempt was successful, so far as I can find, was in 1898, a decade ago. The bill reached under this process of elimination was the Hawaiian bill, to which Mr. Speaker Reed was certainly opposed. It is perfectly true that in its earliest stages he used all the means in his power to prevent its consideration.

However, it is very evident, upon consulting the RECORD, that as soon as Mr. Reed and his personal representatives, the Committee on Rules, saw that the House in all probability had made up its mind to reach the Hawaiian bill, they no longer interposed for purposes of delay the various parliamentary devices at their disposal.

Since that time, so far as I know, there has been no successful attempt to repeat the mode of procedure then adopted. I may, of course, be mistaken, but if I am right it must be admitted that a precedent 10 years old only goes to prove the rule. If the process of reaching unprivileged bills by elimination has not succeeded more than once in a decade, it certainly is not a very practical method.

Let us confront the situation as we usually find it, and we shall quickly see the narrowness of the opportunity which Mr. Hinds suggests. Suppose that it is desired to reach a highly contentious but important bill on the Union Calendar, and that there are plenty of intervening bills more favorably placed. Some Member of the House thinks that a majority wishes to consider this bill. He would like the House to vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider some appropriation bill; but he has no opportunity to explain his purpose, because that motion is not debatable. Generally the House does not understand what he is driving at.

But suppose that he has a chance to explain his plans before the motion is made, and suppose that the House sees their full bearing. Even so, Members will think a long time before voting down the consideration of one of the great supply bills of this Government, especially when they are told, as they will be told, and as they were told the only time I ever saw elimination attempted, that there would be plenty of time later on to reach the desired measure.

Not only is it true that Members will hesitate to vote down the consideration of a general appropriation bill, but, even if they should do so, it takes a long time for a yea and nay vote. Then comes the call of the calendar. That exhausts an hour more, but at last a chance comes to reach the Union Calendar. All committees at this stage have equal right of recognition. Suppose that committee after committee is recognized and that one intervening bill after another is brought up. To each of them in turn consideration must be refused by a yea and nay vote, if demanded. How often under these circumstances would the House be persuaded to vote down adjournment? In other words, it might be necessary to take recesses for several days before a majority, no matter how determined, could reach the desired bill. Meanwhile many a bill will have intervened against whose consideration Members will not care to vote. Members will say to themselves: "If I vote down the consideration of that bill, after I go home I shall be obliged to spend all my time in explaining why I did so."

In short, if they vote down all intervening measures, Members will find themselves in the unenviable position of being misunderstood and misrepresented to their constituents. We all know the lengths to which any one of us will go to avoid being placed on the defensive in a campaign.

Granting, for the sake of argument, that a majority can, by pushing everything else aside, get at some particular measure, even then the argument is not concluded. There will always be plenty of Members from districts politically close who will be only too glad to postpone indefinitely the consideration of an awkward bill, if they can do so without leaving a trace behind them. By the indirect but simple method of voting to consider some other bill they can easily accomplish their object. Their timidity with regard to their own fortunes will lead them, even when they favor an awkward measure, to take advantage of any opportunity presented by which its indefinite postponement may be secured, especially if the measure is of such a nature that opinion at home is seriously divided on its merits.

After all, it is an absurdity to maintain that the proper way to test the desire of the House to consider a particular bill is to take a vote on the consideration of some other bill. The proper way to prevent the consideration of a bill or to defeat a bill is by a majority vote against the consideration or against the passage of the bill itself, and not by the indirect method of a majority vote in connection with some other bill or on some side issue.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to understand the gentleman's last proposition. Would the gentleman favor a rule (I understand that to be his ultimatum) that would allow a Member to call up a bill against which a question of consideration could not be raised at all?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, unless I have entirely failed to convert my thoughts into words, that certainly is not what I said.

Mr. KEIFER. But the gentleman's last sentence incorporated the idea that the only way to get rid of a bill was to vote upon its merits.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KEIFER. That is exactly what the gentleman said, as I understood it. Now, I understand, he would like to have any pet measure called up that any Member might have, and then no question of consideration be made against it at all. Otherwise the difficulty he has just been so ably stating of having some other bill put in opposition to it would apply to that bill after you had reached it.

I understand the rule has always been, even in contested election cases—matters of the highest privilege—that the question of consideration could always be raised.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is that a question? It is the longest question that I ever undertook to answer. I repeat that the right way to defeat the consideration of a bill or to defeat its passage is to vote on these questions as related to the bill itself, and not to vote on the consideration or on the merits of some other bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the gentleman favor a rule which would compel the majority to take up and consider a measure which the majority did not wish to take up?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I favor a rule compelling the House to vote on the question of consideration of any bill on the calendar that a committee chooses to bring forward. That is the purpose of my proposed rule for calendar Tuesday, which the gentleman has in his hand. Under that rule the House can not escape a vote on the consideration of any bill of interest to the whole country which a committee calls up.

Mr. OLMSTED. Your rule would compel them to vote on the merits and does not admit of any question of consideration at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not preclude the question of consideration which can always be raised in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OLMSTED. It can not be raised at all in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will pardon me, does he not think that the object which he wishes to attain could be better attained by putting one more rule in our body of rules to this effect, that whenever a majority of the membership of the House requests in writing that a given public bill shall be voted upon at a certain time, it shall become, by virtue of the petition itself, the order of the day for that day? There you have a majority of the House in favor of consideration, no doubt about the fact, and you merely make it the order of the day for the day designated, unless some other bill, by a similar process, has been made the order of the day for that day.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have given some thought to the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi, but the proposed rule for "Calendar Tuesday" seems to me to meet the situation a little better. I am not prepared to assert that the criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is not correct as to the question of consideration on days when we are discussing the Union Calendar, but my opinion is that he is mistaken. If he is in the right, however, I shall be very glad to have the rule amended so as to permit the raising the question of consideration in Committee of the Whole.

As I have said, it may often be the case that a majority of the House wishes to conceal its attitude. I am sorry to say that at times I, myself, have been in that state of mind. Like everyone else, I have often been only too glad when bills were smothered and have been as ready as the next man to take advantage of any situation which could prevent the consideration of some awkward measure. For all that, it is a great question whether rules ought to be drawn in such a way as to protect Members, like myself, who are timorous as to their individual fortunes. [Laughter and applause.]

It is a great question whether rules should be drawn so that we can conceal our attitudes from our constituents. We are not sent here to conceal our attitudes, but, when the appropriate time comes, to reveal them. As long as the rules are in their present form, when it is to my interest to do so, I shall try to conceal my attitude just as much as any other Member in this House. I contend that after a measure of great public importance has been thoroughly thrashed out in committee and has been favorably reported to the House the time has come for Members to reveal their attitudes.

I am perfectly aware that throughout the United States there has been a great deal of unreasonable criticism of the present Speaker of the House of Representatives. I am well aware that he is blamed for refusing to let down the bars in order to admit legislation badly placed on the calendar. I am well aware that in a certain sense that criticism is not always, nor even usually, deserved. But the Speaker must take that blame, because, under the present state of affairs, with his influence over the Committee on Rules and with the appointment of all committees in his hands, in reality the final responsibility rests with him. For example, I know very well that a measure in which I was interested a few years ago, a measure providing an educational test for immigrants into the United States, was very embarrassing to most of the Members. I know that the Speaker was doing nothing more than carrying out the will of a large majority of this House in not permitting the consideration of that bill except under such conditions as precluded a demand for a yea-and-nay vote on its significant clauses. I appreciated the Speaker's difficulty, for I knew that many Members, who otherwise would be glad to vote for that educational test, found themselves between two fires in their own constituencies. As there was an election approaching, they feared defeat whichever way they voted. I question whether it is proper that the rules should be so drawn as to permit Members, no matter how precarious their position, to avoid a yea-and-nay vote on so important a matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit a question? I am listening with a great deal of pleasure to what the gentleman has to say, but I want to ask this question to get the matter clear in my mind. Is the gentleman's idea about the question of consideration this, that a Member wanting to bring up a bill should rise in his place and address the Speaker and ask for consideration of the bill, without being compelled, as the rule now compels us to do, to go and beg the Speaker to let us rise and address him and bring the matter up?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I believe that a committee should have that right. I am not sure that I believe that an individual Member should be permitted to throw a bomb of that sort. I fear, if that privilege were given to each of us individually, that it would be abused and that a great many bills would be projected into this House out of pure malice—impracticable bills on liquor questions, for instance—bills that had no chance of becoming a law, but of such a nature that Members from close districts would find themselves in serious difficulty whether they voted "yea" or "nay."

Therefore I am contending that this privilege should rest with committees or with a responsible group, or, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests, with a majority of Members on petition rather than with individuals.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose a gentleman rises and the Speaker recognizes him and puts the question this way, that if by viva voce vote the House agrees to take it up, then they shall take it up. I do not mean a record vote.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the trouble is that in most cases the Constitution provides for a yea-and-nay vote, if demanded by a sufficient number. A yea-and-nay vote may always be demanded, except when we are acting in Committee of the Whole or when a second is sought on suspension of the rules.

The Speaker of this House has a prerogative which is given to no presiding officer in Europe. He has the privilege of selecting committees. In every parliamentary body throughout Europe, with the exception of the Bundesrat, the upper house of the German Parliament, and with the possible exception of the Russian and Turkish chambers—I have not been able to get the rules of those two parliamentary bodies—committees are chosen indirectly by the House itself. Usually the chamber is, by lot, divided into sections or bureaus, and each section chooses its own member of each committee.

In the British House of Commons members of select committees are chosen either directly by the House or by a committee of selection, while standing committees are exclusively chosen in the latter way. The standing committees of the British House of Commons, however, have functions entirely different from those of our standing committees. In reality they are subdivisions of the committee of the whole. They consist of from 60 to 80 members, examine no witnesses, and are not supposed, theoretically, to consider contentious measures.

The military and marine committees of the Bundesrat are named by the Emperor. Other committees of that body are chosen in the usual continental way.

As a result of our system of choosing committees, we have given our Speaker great legislative power in addition to the judicial power which every Speaker ought to have. In England the speaker has even more judicial power than in the United States, for his decisions may not be overruled, neither need he put a motion to close debate unless he sees fit. Many people think that the time has come to separate the judicial from the legislative powers of our Speaker; in other words, to take from him the right to appoint the committees. I have not definitely made up my mind on that question, because I believe that there is a reform which stands out preeminent above it, a reform which should be adopted at once, a reform of such a nature that any revision of the rules which does not include it is bound to be a failure.

I believe that some definite time should be set apart when nothing is in order except matters which are not at present privileged under the rules. I think that the most imperative reform which presses is the provision of a day when unprivileged measures and unprivileged measures only shall be in order so long as any that a committee wishes to call up remain on the calendar. I am aware that such a rule as I propose would violate our time-honored ideas as to the right of adjournment and would seriously inflame various other parliamentary vermiform appendices inherited from the past.

I have not as yet heard anybody suggest that Members of this House should no longer have the right of criticism nor have I heard anybody suggest that they should not have the right to defeat a bill. I have, however, often known the position to be taken that the chief function of a Member of the House of Representatives ought to be to act as a component part of a sort of electoral college for the choice of Speaker, that the Speaker so chosen as a representative of the majority should appoint a small Committee on Rules, and that they, acting together, should decide on all legislation to be presented to the House. People who take that view are very fond of pointing to the situation in the British House of Commons.

There is no question that the individual member of the House of Commons has even less chance than the individual Member of this House to press a contentious bill, or, in fact, any bill, to a successful issue. Unless the treasury bench, which is the name usually given to the ministry, chooses to adopt the proposition of a private member, or at all events, places no obstacles in its way, it has no chance of becoming a law. Even if the treasury bench is indifferent, the bill of the private member usually fails to reach the final stages. Members ballot for the opportunity to introduce bills. The time is limited for their introduction. I am told that when a momentous measure is earnestly sought by a large group, many members put down their names intending to present the same bill. In that way they obtain a greater chance for its consideration. I have not as yet verified this information.

It is this exclusive control by the treasury bench to which defenders of the speaker's transcendent power are wont to point.

They entirely overlook the other side of the picture. While the treasury bench is indeed all powerful, at the same time during every hour of the session, on penalty of resignation, it is responsible to the majority of the House. Unless in every respect the ministry satisfies that majority, resign it must. Whether they present a bill or oppose an amendment, if the matter is of the least importance the treasury bench must show a majority on pain of death. The consequence is that they are very, very careful indeed always to yield to the wishes of a majority of the House.

On the other hand, our Committee on Rules is responsible but once in every two years, and then only indirectly, just as a Senator is responsible to the people only indirectly through the legislature. The House does not appoint the Committee on Rules. Its members may or may not be reappointed by the Speaker, but in any event at no time are they directly responsible to the House.

Turning once more to the House of Commons, not only is the ministry responsible for every measure it brings forward, but it is likewise responsible for any omission from its legislative programme. Proceedings of each session of the Commons are opened by the King's speech, in which the legislation to be enacted is outlined. If any measure is omitted which a group of members believes should have been mentioned, an opportunity presents itself when the time comes for the House to adopt its reply. The motion is made to amend the reply by advocating the measure which the Government did not see fit to include in the speech from the throne. Thereupon a vote is taken, and, if the ministry is defeated, if an important amendment is carried against it, resignation must follow. In fact, one of Lord Salisbury's ministries went down on just such an occasion. Since then no ministry has been bold enough to omit from its programme any measure which the people really desire to see enacted. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania this morning——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman leaves that point I want to inquire if the gentleman will state what proportion of the business of the House of Commons was projected to the body by the ministry?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. All the important business.

Mr. KEIFER. Was it not a very large part of all the business they do?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Substantially so.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania this morning told us of the great difficulty experienced in understanding British procedure. I think he called our attention to the fact that there are 96 rules of the House of Commons, while we have but 45. That is true. There are 96 rules, but then there are 62 clauses in one of our rules. I hold in my hand the standing orders relating to public business in the House of Commons. There are 16 pages of rules in this book in my hand, as against 35 pages of our manual occupied by the rules of the House of Representatives, to say nothing of the space taken up by Jefferson's Parliamentary Law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how much more time does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts wishes to adjust himself to the probable desire of the House to hear from other speakers.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Does the gentleman know how much time he desires?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts thinks he may take twenty minutes more, but it is very hard for him to say.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I suggest that the gentleman have thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, if I may interreupt the gentleman, the gentleman referred to 96 rules of the House of Commons pertaining to public business; I merely suggest that the total rules, including those relating to private business, number 249.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, private bills in England are generally matters affecting corporations or municipalities. Much of the work is accomplished by permanent officials before Parliament meets. There is practically a separate code of private-bill procedure, but few members of the house need to concern themselves with it. Private bills relating to Scotland are considered in that part of the Kingdom. Private business such as we find on our Private Calendar is exceedingly unusual.

The gentleman made some observations as to the introduction of bills, holding that it is a much-restricted privilege in the House of Commons. To a certain extent that is true especially in the case of bills involving expenditure. But it is very hard to compare their system with ours. When a private member of the House of Commons wishes to introduce a bill he obtains, usually from the public-bill office, a blank form called a "dummy." To this he affixes a short title, but nothing else. After obtaining leave he introduces it and the bill takes its first reading. Until shortly before the time comes for its second reading he can change the contents at will so long as the provisions inserted conform to the title and to any statement he may have made to the house. Our system is so different as to defy comparison.

The gentleman also contended that in no case can extraneous matters be discussed when a bill is before the House of Commons for consideration. That also is true, but he did not point out that there exists a "motion to adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance." This motion opens the way for the discussion of extraneous matters. There is also ample field for debate on every subject under the sun in the two or three weeks which are usually occupied in formulating the reply to the King's speech.

If, later in the session, occasion arises for general debate, it takes place on that motion to "adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance." When the mover finishes his remarks, as I understand it, he usually withdraws that motion.

Mr. OLMSTED. While it is pending he must discuss that particular bill of urgent importance.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I do not understand that any bill need be before the House.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I want to know if I understood him correctly. Did the gentleman state that on the debate in reply to the address it is usual to withdraw motions that are offered by members?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I did not mean to be so understood. I meant to say that it was usual to withdraw the motion to "adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance."

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will give me his attention for a minute, I will read:

> Great latitude was formerly permitted in the discussion of motions to adjourn. Taking advantage of this fact, it became the habit to create an opportunity for debating some matter that could not be brought forward in the ordinary course of procedure by moving the adjournment before the orders of the day had been taken up, and the object being merely debate, the motion was almost always withdrawn after it had served its purpose.

Mr. OLMSTED. That says "formerly."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the same custom exists to-day, or an analogous one. I believe that opportunities for making the motion are now more restricted, and that the discussion may only take place at the evening session.

I hold in my hand the calendar of the House of Commons of Wednesday, May 13, 1908. It is the perfection of clearness when once explained, and the explanation takes but a few minutes. Members can see exactly what is coming up every day. They can keep track of measures. They can be on hand for divisions whenever any are likely to take place. That is a reform, which I hope some day we may be able to adopt.

One word more. I have heard a good many criticisms of my suggestion that Republican Members, who feel that the rules should be changed, ought to take no part in the usual caucus held at the opening of Congress. At all events, I feel that we should leave the caucus before discussion of the rules begin. I have heard it said that such refusal to participate shows disloyalty to the party. I think not. In the first place, any man who votes in a caucus is bound by the result of that vote. He should, therefore, be very careful, indeed, to ascertain whether it is in truth a party matter on which he is asked to caucus.

I wonder how gentlemen are to be persuaded that the adoption of rules at the beginning of Congress is a party measure? If the subject had been mentioned in our national platform, it might be different. Even so, I know of no way to determine definitely whether this or that matter is or is not a party measure. I conceive, Mr. Chairman, that if the Republican national platform declares in favor of a particular proposition, and if the President of the United States, supposing that he is a Republican, includes the matter in a message, and if, in response, the Senate passes the legislation desired, then when the bill comes over to the House I should hold it to be a party question. That is sound, is it not? I hear no remarks to the contrary. That very situation arose in the spring of 1906. Yet I saw one of the Republican members of the Committee on Rules act as teller in opposition, and I saw the Speaker of this House pass at the head of the column between the tellers in opposition to the measure of which I speak. With the recollection of that scene still fresh in my memory, I refuse to be alarmed at the cry of party disloyalty, and I await with eagerness a better definition than that which I have just given you as to what a party question may be. [Loud applause.]

Proposed new rule for the House of Representatives.

RULE XLVI.

CALENDAR TUESDAY.

First. Except during the last six days of a session, or after the adoption by both Houses of Congress of a concurrent resolution for adjournment sine die, each Tuesday that the House of Representatives is in session, whether or not it is reckoned in the Journal as Tuesday, shall be set apart as provided by this rule and shall be known as "Calendar Tuesday."

Second. On Calendar Tuesday, except as provided in clauses 8 and 9 of this rule, no business shall be in order except prayer by the Chaplain, reading and approval of the Journal, business on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and business on the House Calendar: Provided, That business clothed with privilege under clause 61, Rule XI, or under clause 9, Rule XIV, shall not be in order.

Third. On the first Calendar Tuesday in each month preference shall be given to business on the House Calendar and on all other Calendar Tuesdays in each month the Speaker shall leave his chair after appointing a Chairman to preside, and the House shall resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Fourth. On Calendar Tuesday the Speaker or the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the case may be, shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar or on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the case may be, but it shall not be in order for any committee to call up more than two bills before the other committees have been called in their turn. If the call of committees shall not be complete before the House passes to other business, it shall be resumed at the point where discontinued, preference being given to the last measure under consideration.

Fifth. On Calendar Tuesday no motion to adjourn, to take a recess, or that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union do rise, shall be in order before 4.45 p. m. unless all business in order under clause 4 of this rule has been disposed of.

Sixth. On Calendar Tuesday in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, at any time after the exipration of forty minutes devoted to the consideration of a measure, it shall be in order to move to close general debate and this motion shall be decided without debate.

Seventh. On Calendar Tuesday, at 4.45 p. m., or earlier if the call of committees provided for in clause 4 of this rule has been completed, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if sitting, shall rise and the Chairman shall at once report its findings to the House. Should adjournment intervene before the report is fully disposed of, it shall be in order for any Member to call it up for consideration under the same rules and under the same conditions that are prescribed for reports from the Committee on Rules in clause 61, Rule XI; but no motion for adjournment shall be entertained until the Chairman shall have made his report.

Eighth. On Calendar Tuesday, either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, at any time when no measure is under consideration, it shall be in order to move that further proceedings under this rule be suspended for the day; but this motion may not be entertained when, in the opinion of the Speaker or Chairman, its purpose is clearly dilatory.

If two-thirds of the Members voting take the affirmative, but not otherwise, proceedings under this rule shall be suspended for the day: Provided, That if at the time this motion prevails the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is sitting, it shall immediately rise, the Chairman shall report its findings, and that report shall be fully disposed of before the vote for suspension becomes effective.

Ninth. On the completion of all business in order under the foregoing clauses, this rule shall cease to be operative for the day.

QUESTIONS FOR ORAL ANSWER.

* 1. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that cattle drives took place on Sunday, the 3d May last, from the farm of Mr. Robert Blake, Ballyglunin Park, Tuam, from the grass farms of Moyne, belonging to Mr. R. W. Waithman, and of Mullaghmore, owned by Mr. O'Rorke, as well as from other farms in the neighborhood; whether numerous droves of horses, cattle, and sheep were found on the road from Tuam to Moylough, making it almost impassable for vehicular traffic, on Monday morning, the 4th May, from the farm of Mr. O. C. Donelan, Sylane, near Tuam, on the same date from the lands of Southill, Mitchelstown, and Robinstown, Delvin district of county Westmeath, when 200 head were driven, and on Tuesday, the 5th May, from Gralla farm, near Loughrea; how many arrests were made in each case, and can the police attribute any motives for the outrages; whether he can make a statement as to what steps, if any, the Government intend to take to meet the very grave state of affairs which at present exists, and whether he will lay the whole facts before the cabinet, with a view to bringing into force the crimes act.

* 2. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that Mr. Peter O'Ryan's stables, Carrowreagh, near Elphin, county Roscommon, were burned to the ground on Sunday, 3d May last; whether the police reports attribute the outbreak to incendiarism; and, if so, can they give any reason for the outrage.

* 3. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that an extensive cattle drive took place on Sunday morning, 3d May last, at Knockalaghla, near Ballintubber, 5 miles from Castlerea, county Roscommon; can he state how far from the farm the cattle were when discovered by the police and in what condition; can the police attribute any reason for the outrage, and how many arrests have been made.

* 4. Mr. BOLAND. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the actual terms of the purchase agreement entered into between the late Mr. J. W. Leahy and his Aghatubrid estate tenants on 8th January, 1907; whether he is aware that the tenants have fulfilled their side of the agreement, but that since the death of Mr. Leahy all efforts to have the purchase agreement carried into effect have been blocked by the new agent of the estate; can he state how many communications have passed between the agent and the estates commissioners on the subject of the completion of the sale; and whether, in view of the fact that by the terms of the agreement the fixing of the purchase price was left unconditionally in the hands of the estates commissioners, he will now state what further steps will be taken by the estates commissioners.

* 5. Mr. BOLAND. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he can now state what answer has been received by the estates commissioners from the agent of the estate of the late Mr. J. W. Leahy, at Aghatubrid, near Cahirciveen, with reference to the purchase negotiations; whether the terms of the agreement signed by the late Mr. Leahy and the honorable member for South Kerry, acting on behalf of the tenants, will now be carried into effect by Mr. Leahy's representatives, and what steps have been taken by the estates commissioners since this house adjourned for the Easter recess.

* 6. Mr. MACNEILL. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that in calculating the percentages of illiteracy in Ireland, officially given to the public in every census report, every child of 5 years old and upward is counted as an illiterate if unable to read and write, and that this age limit, adopted on the authority of the census commissioners of 1841, has been continued in every census since that time; why, having regard to the fact that according to the compulsory clauses of the Irish education act of 1892 6 years is the age at which children are bound to attend school, is every child who happens to be 5 years old on the day of the census entered as illiterate if unable to read and write; and whether, inasmuch as this age limit for illiteracy is calculated to convey an erroneous impression, the census commissioners will be directed in their next census report to adopt 10 years as the limit of age for illiteracy, or, if it be judged desirable to keep, for the purposes of comparison with former census returns, the percentage of illiteracy on the old lines of 5 years old and upward, will directions be given to the census commissioners to furnish a new column giving the percentage of illiteracy on a new basis of counting only the population 10 years of age and upward.

* 7. Mr. MACNEILL. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that since 1841 the percentages of illiteracy in Ireland have been officially given to the public in every census report, but that no corresponding percentages of illiteracy have been published by the census commissioners of England and Scotland; why, having regard to the desirability of an official record of the state of education in Ireland as regards illiteracy, has a similar information of the state of education in England and Scotland as regards illiteracy been withheld from the public; and what is the reason that the favor extended to Ireland in having an official record of illiteracy is not conferred on England and Scotland.

* 8. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether the cost of car hire for conveying extra police to and fro in connection with cattle driving and other agrarian outrages is charged to the county concerned; and, if so, what has been the charge under this head for the various disturbed counties during January, February, March, and April of this year, respectively.

* 9. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether any instructions have been issued by the executive to the effect that in cases of cattle driving and other agrarian offenses where arrests are made, that the prisoners are only to be bound over to keep the peace and not be more severely dealt with, pending the passage through this house of the Irish universities bill; and whether he will now adopt more stringent methods to vindicate the law in Ireland and secure the lives and property of law-abiding persons.

* 10. Mr. LONSDALE. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he has information respecting a shooting outrage at the house of a farmer at Rathcanning, near Midletown, county Cork, on the 4th instant; and whether any arrests have been made in connection with the occurrence.

* 11. Mr. BOLAND. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the published correspondence which has passed between the president of St. Patrick's Training College Drumcondra, and the Irish registrar-general with reference to the returns for illiteracy in the census; and whether, in view of the fact that no records of illiteracy are included in the reports of the English and Scotch education departments, he will take into consideration the advisability of changing the age limit from 5 to 10 years, in order to secure greater accuracy and to prevent the inclusion, as illiterates, of children who are not compelled to attend school until they have reached the age of 6 years.

* 12. Mr. JOHN REDMOND. * 13. Mr. THOMAS O'DONNELL. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the laborers' cottage inquiry, finished in Killarney on the 17th January, 1908, and the inspector's report was due on the 17th February, but that the same has not been received yet, which means that the cottages can not be built this year, as, when the report comes down, there is a month for appeal, and between the arbitration and the three weeks' notice of sitting, that would take till the 1st of September, and a contractor can not be got to do the work in the winter; and whether steps will be taken to have the inspector's report sent on at once.

* 14. Mr. LONSDALE. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received a report of the riotous proceedings at Loughrea on Friday last; how many times had the police to charge the crowd with batons; and what was the cause of these disturbances.

* 17. Mr. LONSDALE. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that 16 men, charged at Tuam with having driven the cattle of Patrick Newell off his farm at Woodquay, admitted the offense; whether these men were in negotiation for the sale of this farm; and whether, in accordance with the pledge that persons who have taken part in cattle driving will not be permitted to share in the distribution of lands, he will draw the attention of the estates commissioners to the fact that these men are disqualified.

* 18. Mr. CHARLES MACVEIGH. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether the attention of the local government board has been called to the application of James Deveney, of Lismonaghan, Letterkenny Union, county Donegal, Ireland, and for whom the rural district council selected a site for a laborer's cottage on the farm of Robert Wylie, of Carrygauley, which site was visited and approved by the local government board inspector during an inquiry held in Letterkenny in November, 1907; whether he is aware that the farmer, Wylie, brought an action against Deveney at quarter sessions, which was defended by the rural council, and Judge Cook gave Deveney the site by giving judgment in his favor; if he can state why the arbitrator, in the face of the approval of the inspector and the judgment of the court, has failed or refused to give the site to Deveney; and will he direct that steps be taken to provide a cottage for this man.

* 19. Mr. JEREMIAH MACVEAGH. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he can say if any complaints have reached the police as to the injury to trees on a plantation at Finvoy, near Ballymoney, county Antrim; whether he can state the names and addresses of the landlord and of the lessee; and whether notice has been given of any claim for compensation.

* 22. Captain CRAIG. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the dwelling house of a farmer named William Colbert, of Rathcanning, near Midletown, County Cork, was fired into on Tuesday, May 5 last; whether the police evidence goes to show that injury was intended to the sleeping inmates, or whether the direction of the shot merely indicates an intention to intimidate; and what steps have been taken to bring the perpetrators to justice.

* 23. Mr. VINCENT KENNEDY. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland if he will say whether the Enniskillen No. 2 rural district council has yet lodged a scheme under the laborers' (Ireland) act, 1906; and if so, how many cottages and extra allotments does it propose to deal with; and when will the inquiry be held.

* 25. Mr. O'SHEE. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether the estates commissioners have an application from Edward Coleman, an evicted tenant of the Grant estate, County Waterford, for reinstatement on their files; how long have they had the application; whether he is aware that Mr. Coleman has died since the application was lodged, and that his children are still awaiting restoration to his former holding; whether the same is in the possession of the owner; and what steps have been taken to acquire the lands in order to reinstate them.

To ask the under secretary of state for the colonies if he can state the exact quantity of sugar on which duty has been paid by sugar planters of Trinidad employing indentured East Indian immigrants toward the reimbursement of expenses for their collection and introduction during the years 1905, 1906, and 1907; the exact quantity of cane cultivated by cane farmers and sold during these years to sugar factories in which such immigrants are employed; and whether separate accounts are kept in such factories of the quantity of sugar manufactured and exported, and an account given to the local government of such portion in which indentured labor is not employed.

* 32. Mr. SUMMERBELL. To ask the under secretary of state for the colonies if he has received from the annual assembly of the Jamaica Baptist Union a communication protesting against the continued introduction of East Indian indentured coolies into Jamaica, and pointing out that the laboring and small settler classes, who contribute the bulk of the revenue of the colony, are unable to obtain regular and paying employment on the sugar estates and fruit plantations, and are therefore under the necessity of emigrating to Central America and other places to seek work, and that thereby a great injustice is done to these classes and the island generally in taxing them to introduce East Indians to compete with the superabundant labor market of the country; and if so, can he state whether it is the intention of the Government to restrict the introduction of such coolies, and to place the entire cost of the same on the planters requiring such labor.

* 33. Sir GILBERT PARKER. To ask the under secretary of state for the colonies what is the record of service of Dr. C. Lane Sansom in the Transvaal; what positions has he held during the last seven years; what pension or compensation has been granted him; and whether employment will be found for him in the colonial service or in some department of state in this country.

* 34. Sir GILBERT PARKER. To ask the under secretary of state for the colonies whether anyone has been appointed to take the position of superintendent or controller of the native health department for the Transvaal, from which Dr. C. Lane Sansom was lately retrenched; and whether, in view of the results produced by Doctor Sansom in reducing native mortality and in bettering the condition of the natives in the mines, this Government is satisfied that the abolition of his appointment, made upon grounds of economy, is in the best interests of that native population for whose well-being, under the constitution of the Transvaal, it is directly responsible.

* 35. Mr. HAROLD COX. To ask the under secretary of state for the colonies whether his attention has been drawn to the Transvaal Government Gazette extraordinary of the 30th of March, 1908, containing the draft of the new gold law of that colony, and particularly to sections 127 and 128; and whether the effect of the proposed new law will be to deprive colored persons, including British Indians, of the right they now possess to trade and reside in the mining districts of Johannesburg, Boxburg, and Krugersdorp, and compel them to remove for both trade and residence into compounds, locations, or bazaars.

* 36. Mr. COURTHOPE. * 37. Sir GEORGE WHITE. To ask the president of the board of education whether he will publish, uniform with the list of public elementary schools in single-school parishes [Cd. 3990], a list of schools in parishes where there is only one public elementary school available for boys, or for girls, or for infants, but which are not single-school parishes as defined by section 3 of the elementary education (England and Wales) bill, 1908, because the departments for boys, girls, or infants are in separate buildings and are recognized by the board of education as separate schools.

* 38. Sir GEORGE WHITE. To ask the president of the board of education whether he will publish, in continuation of the list of public elementary schools in single-school parishes [Cd. 3990], a similar list of schools which would be in single-school parishes as defined by section 3 of the elementary education (England and Wales) bill, 1908, but for the fact that the parish is an urban district or municipal borough, and therefore technically is not a rural parish as mentioned in that section.

* 39. Mr. T. F. RICHARDS. To ask the president of the board of education whether he has any control over the methods of punishment adopted at Queen Mary's Grammar School, Walsall; whether he is aware that one form of punishment is flogging; and seeing that this form of punishment is prohibited in the army and navy and is only allowed in His Majesty's prisons, and that then the infliction is administered to criminals, he proposes to take steps to secure more humane methods by those responsible for the above school.

* 40. Mr. CLYNES. To ask the postmaster-general if he is aware that men are employed in connection with the new sorting warehouse, Newton street, Manchester, doing the work of concretors at 6½d. and less per hour; whether the rules of the master builders' association in the district provide for the payment of 8d. per hour for such work as the men named are engaged on; and if so, can some step be taken to bring the contractor within the scope of the fair-contracts regulations and secure for the workmen the recognized rates of pay.

* 41. Mr. COURTHOPE. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty whether any or all of the contracts for the supply of Portland cement to the Admiralty this year have yet been completed; whether all the firms and companies which have supplied cement to the Admiralty during recent years were invited to tender; if not, for what reason the omissions were made; and whether such firms or companies will be allowed to tender before the contracts are completed.

* 43. Mr. TIMOTHY DAVIES. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty what was the annual cost during the three years ended 31st March, 1908, of keeping the harbor and breakwater of Alderney in serviceable condition and repair; and what use is made of the harbor by the vessels of His Majesty's navy.

* 44. Mr. VINCENT KENNEDY. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty if he will say whether the number of accidents to ships and other craft of war during maneuvers is on the increase, and what are the causes alleged; will he state what is the total Admiralty loss in men and money due to accidents during maneuvers and generally for the past seven years.

* 45. Mr. BOTTOMLEY. To ask the prime minister whether the public trustee is still a director of any public company.

* 46. Mr. NIELD. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty whether the coast-guard stations in Scotland have an average coast line of 10 miles to look after, and that several of such stations are and have for two years past been 50 per cent short of their proper complement; and whether he will take steps to bring up these stations to their proper strength without delay.

* 47. Mr. NIELD. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty what coast-guard stations there are in the United Kingdom, excluding detachments, whose complements have been reduced by 33 per cent or more, either temporarily or permanently, with the names of each class, respectively; and whether it is in the contemplation of the Admiralty at some future date, and approximately how soon, to have these stations filled up to their proper complements.

* 48. Mr. NIELD. To ask the first lord of the Admiralty when the respective coast-guard stations, excluding detachments whose complements have been reduced by 33 per cent and upward, were so reduced, respectively; and whether, in the opinion of the Board of Admiralty, the continuance of these stations in their present state of reduced numbers is compatible with the efficient performance of the many important and arduous duties which devolve upon the service.

* 49. Mr. WATT. To ask the secretary for Scotland whether his attention has been called to an epidemic of typhoid fever in Kelvinside, Glasgow; whether this outbreak has been traced to the selling of milk from a farm where there was a typhoid patient; at what date did his department or the local authority become aware of these facts; on what date was the first action taken to stop the sale of milk from that farm; and whether, in view of the number of deaths that have resulted, he will issue instructions which will in future prevent delays between the knowledge of the facts and the action resulting from them.

* 50. Mr. BOTTOMLEY. To ask the secretary for Scotland whether he can state the number of arrests for drunkenness on Sunday last in the cities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, respectively.

* 51. Mr. BOWERMAN. To ask the president of the board of trade whether his attention has been called to the fact that in 1907 93,410 less cattle than in 1905 were imported for slaughter into Great Britain from North America, and 20,824 less during the four months ended 30th April, 1908, compared with the same period in 1907; whether he is aware that consequently the supply of hides and offals of freshly slaughtered animals used as raw material in many manufactures has very seriously decreased to the detriment of British trade, to the loss of work and wages of thousands of British workmen, and to the rise in prices to the consumer of all commodities affected; and whether he will cause inquiry to be made into the remedies for increasing the supply of hides, offals, and freshly killed meat of imported foreign animals, with especial reference to the plan for establishing a foreign animals wharf and abattoir in the island of Alderney, and to the advisability of relaxing the restrictions now placed on the landing at the foreign animals wharves at Deptford and Birkenhead of all animals except those from North America.

* 52. Mr. HAROLD COX. To ask the president of the board of trade whether he can give the house any information with regard to the reductions about to be made in the Danish tariff; and whether he will issue a memorandum comparing the duties levied on important articles of British manufacture by Denmark under the new tariff with the duties levied upon British goods of the same class by Canada, Australia, and New Zealand.

* 53. Mr. SEAVERNS. To ask the president of the board of trade if he is aware that in the debate on the second reading of the port of London bill no expression of views was given by those representing importers, exporters, and manufacturers, upon whom the entire financial burden of improving the port is to fall; whether he will see that these interests are represented upon the joint committee appointed to consider the bill; and whether he will consider the advisability of placing a portion of the burden upon other interests which are equally to profit by the improvement of the port.

* 54. Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON. To ask the president of the board of trade whether he will cause instructions to be issued to the officers of the board of trade to prevent Chinese boarding-house keepers from having access to the board of trade premises for the purpose of supplying crews of Chinamen to British ships; whether he is aware that it has been the practice for many years to prevent British seamen and others from using the waiting rooms of mercantile marine offices unless they can produce certificates of discharges to prove that they are bona fide seamen; and whether he will cause this rule to be stringently applied to Chinamen in the same manner that it is applied to other seamen.

* 55. Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON. To ask the president of the board of trade whether his attention has been called to the excitement which prevailed amongst British seamen at the mercantile marine office, Poplar, on Saturday and Sunday, in consequence of the owners of the steamships Zambesi and Strathness endeavoring to ship crews of Chinamen; whether he is aware that the Chinamen in question were unable to pass the language test, as required by the merchant shipping act; whether it has been brought to his notice that when Chinese crews are being signed on duly qualified and independent interpreters are not provided by the owners; whether he is aware that these crews are being found by well-known Chinese crimps, and what action, if any, does the board of trade intend to take to put an end to these practices.

* 56. Mr. BOWERMAN. To ask the honorable member for South Somerset, as representing the president of the board of agriculture, whether his attention has been called to the report of the markets' committee of the corporation of the city of London, in which it is stated that fewer live cattle are coming from Canada and the United States, causing a reduction in the quantity of freshly killed meat, which is made up by increased importations of preserved and frozen products, and lessening the circulation of wages in the meat-producing and kindred industries; and whether he will cause independent inquiry to be made as to relaxing the regulations of the board with regard to the landing of animals for slaughter in Great Britain, and as to other methods of increasing, with due regard to the safety of native flocks and herds, the supply of freshly killed meat to British markets.

* 60. Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN. To ask the secretary to the treasury whether any public announcement was made of the resignation of the late treasury remembrancer for Ireland, and if so, when, where, and how was it announced; what was the date of the resignation and the date of the appointment of Mr. Newby to the vacancy; if no public announcement was made of the vacancy, what opportunity had Irishmen to apply for the position; whether he will inquire if this may be the reason why no Irishman applied, and will he see that in future such vacancies are duly announced and reasonable time afforded for Irishmen to apply.

* 61. Mr. CHARLES ROBERTS. To ask the secretary to the treasury if he will state the average number of hundredweights of sugar and its equivalents used in brewing for the last three years for which the figures exist, and the annual sum which on this average the brewing trade stands to gain by the reduction of the sugar duty proposed in the budget.

* 62. Mr. MULDOON. To ask the secretary to the treasury what was the date of the retirement of Mr. Holmes, lately treasury remembrancer for Ireland, and on what date was his resignation accepted; what was the date of the appointment of his successor and whether any person responsible for the government of Ireland was consulted before the present remembrancer was appointed, and, if so, what person.

* 63. Mr. VINCENT KENNEDY. * 64. Mr. HAVELOCK WILSON. To ask the secretary of state for the home department whether he has received any report from the police authorities with regard to the disturbances which have occurred at the mercantile marine office, Poplar, in consequence of the contemplated engagement of crews of Chinamen for the steamships Zambesi and Strathness; if he can state the number of inspectors and policemen who were on duty in this connection; whether he is aware that the police prevented British seamen from having access to the waiting room of the mercantile marine office, whilst the Chinamen were freely

*67. Mr. JOYNSON-HICKS. To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if his attention has been drawn to the hardships which will be incurred by many traders in sugar owing to his proposal that rebate on duty-paid stocks of sugar unsold on the 18th instant will not be allowed; if he is aware that in consequence of insufficient accommodation for bonding duties have already been paid on large quantities of sugar which otherwise would have remained in bond; whether, under the circumstances, he can prolong the period of ten days, or else allow a drawback upon stocks held on the 18th of this month, and whether he would be prepared to receive representations on the subject from the traders affected.

*68. Mr. LEVERTON HARRIS. *70. Mr. DUNDAS WHITE. To ask the undersecretary of state for India whether, in view of recent events, he will now take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, or of any independent counsel of suitable standing, as to whether the ecclesiastical law of England as to the effects of consecrating churches applies in British India, and as to whether, according to the law of British India, the fact that a government church has been consecrated with the permission of the government confers the exclusive right to use it for Anglican services, placing before Parliament these opinions and the reasons on which they are based.

*71. Mr. DUNDAS WHITE. To ask the undersecretary of state for India how many Indian government churches have been consecrated since January 1, 1901, stating in each case the place of the church, the date of the consecration, whether that consecration was effected at the request or merely with the permission of the Indian government, and in view of the reference to private subscriptions in the recent memorandum, whether private subscriptions for the building or maintenance of the church had been asked from and received from Presbyterians and other non-Anglicans, and whether in the applications for those subscriptions it was stated that the church was to be used exclusively for Anglican services.

To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland if the estates commissioners have considered the claim of John FitzGerald, of Clounriesk, Askeaton, in the county of Limerick, representative of Maurice FitzGerald, deceased, evicted tenant, for some untenanted land in lieu of his evicted farm.

5. Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland whether he will bring under the notice of the estates commissioners the case of a poor man named James Power, of Kilbreedy, Kilcornan, in the county of Limerick, who was evicted on title about nine years ago by the Earl of Dunraven from a holding consisting of about 27 acres of bog land, which the former was in occupation of for over forty years, and on which he spent years of toil endeavoring to reclaim, and for which he paid a rent of £5 annually; and whether, having regard to the fact that Lord Dunraven subsequently gave this land to a man named Millar, and further to the hardship of the case, he will cause the estates commissioners to at once favorably consider the claim of Power for some untenanted land in the county.

6. Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. To ask the chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland if he can say what has been the result of the estates commissioners' investigation into the case of Patrick Creedon, of Mone-gay, in the county of Limerick, evicted tenant on the estate of the Earl of Devon.

12. Mr. FIELD. To ask the postmaster-general whether he is aware that the late Miss Ida Watson, of the postal-order branch of the money-order department, with only three or four years' service, visited the official female medical officer on the 30th of March last on the ground that she felt seriously ill; that, instead of granting her sick leave, she was sent back on duty; that this young lady felt worse during the following week, culminating in collapse, having to be assisted by a colleague to complete her average on Saturday, the 4th of April; that she was on that day granted three weeks' sick leave by her own private medical practitioner, and that on that night she fell into a state of unconsciousness and remained so for three weeks until she died on the 28th of April; that two specialists gave independent opinions in this case that death was brought about by suppressed influenza, and that if she had been properly treated at first she would likely be now alive; and whether, seeing that when the deceased entered the post-office and up to the time of her fatal illness she was a bright, healthy girl, he will say what are the medical qualifications of the official lady doctor to whom the deceased submitted herself for treatment; and whether, in view of the expenses incurred by the deceased's relatives in Ireland in connection with this case, he will order an independent inquiry into it with a view to prevent a recurrence of similar cases, and grant some compensation to the deceased's relatives.

13. Mr. FIELD. To ask the postmaster-general whether he is aware that the late Miss Houston, of the postal-order branch of the money-order department, had, prior to her sudden death on the 20th of March last, been ailing for some time and attending the official female medical officer, who treated her for dyspepsia and indigestion; that she saw this official doctor specially about a week before her sudden death, on the ground that she felt seriously ill; and that, instead of granting her sick leave, she was ordered back on duty; and, seeing that the deceased died suddenly on the 20th of March from supposed heart disease, will he take similar steps as requested in the case of the late Miss Watson.

14. Mr. FIELD. To ask the postmaster-general whether instructions have been issued to the effect that post-office officials of certain ranks who may receive sick certificates from a certain duly qualified private medical practitioner in the northwestern district of London shall be allowed sick leave but no pay; will he say whether this medical officer had any charge preferred against him in which he was given an opportunity of defending himself; if not, will he say why these instructions have been issued; and, seeing that the post-office medical officers have frequently been in conflict with private medical practitioners on the question of sick leave of post-office officials, and that several cases of deaths have occurred in which these official medical officers have refused sick leave shortly preceding such deaths, will he now grant an inquiry into this subject.

18. Mr. MCARTHUR. To ask the secretary to the treasury whether the board of customs have received three petitions from the examining officers, second class (1881–8 entrants), drawing attention to the inequalities in pay and prospects of the petitioners in comparison with other entrants; whether he is aware that at an interview on 6th November, 1907, a representative deputation complained to the board that through a series of reorganizations the conditions of their entrance to the service had been altered to their detriment; and whether, in view of the failure of the present classification to provide satisfactory advancement for the petitioners, the treasury will give effect to the ameliorative measures suggested by the examining officers' representatives in their recent communications with the secretary to the board of customs.

† Dogs' protection bill, order for second reading read; motion made and question proposed, "That the bill be now read a second time."

Mr. BURLESON. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I have been highly edified by this discussion. I think it is one of the most wholesome manifestations of parliamentary independence and parliamentary intelligence that has been witnessed on this floor during my service. I congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on having raised the question and the debate to a high plane of parliamentary excellence. I do not rise to take either side of this controversy, but rather to suggest a middle ground which I think the House could afford to take with great advantage to its own procedure and with great benefit to the country at large.

I can not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that the present rules are all that the House can require for an efficient and prompt discharge of business, nor do I sympathize with those gentlemen who are constantly criticising the rules as the fons et origo, the fountain and origin of all the defects with which legislation can be charged.

I speak from an experience of the House somewhat extensive, running back to the filibuster described by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and embracing the quite recent performance under its present organization, when a financial measure affecting the commerce of this country more deeply than any passed since the Sherman law was driven through this body with only an hour's debate, without a copy of the bill being in the hands of a single Member, while our only knowledge of its provisions was such memory as we were able to preserve of words read from the desk.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I have witnessed all these various phases of our parliamentary evolution, I venture——

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he also witnessed and remembers the occasion when the Wilson tariff bill, with 634 amendments, was put through the Democratic Congress on an hour's debate?

Mr. COCKRAN. Perfectly; I recall both performances. I protested against both, and voted against both. [Applause.] But there was this difference between the performance when the Wilson bill was passed and that which marked the passage of the last financial bill: When the motion to concur in the amendments of the Senate to the Wilson bill was before the House I was heard to denounce the proposal, as well as to vote against it. When this last performance was accomplished nobody was allowed time to criticise it or point out its defects.

But I am not here to compare offenses of one party with offenses of the other against what I conceive to be sound principles of procedure. I am here to suggest, if I can, a method by which all offenses against fairness and fullness of discussion can be obviated and prevented, whichever party may happen to be in the ascendancy.

Now, I want to state here in the beginning that, in my judgment, differences of views between both sides of this question are not nearly so wide as they would seem. I think they are more vehement in expression than they are wide in extent. I venture this prophecy now: If the Speaker were to appoint a committee of four, six, or eight Members, equally distributed between both parties, to consider whether changes in the rules be desirable, their report would very likely be unanimous and the amendments or changes they might recommend would be very few in number.

I am willing to admit with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is impossible to attempt a discussion of all measures that are brought before this House. I agree with him that it is the right of the majority absolutely to control the proceedings of this body. I supported that right, sir, when it involved almost a test of party loyalty, for I defended the Reed rules on this floor when the Reed rules, still a fresh experiment, were objects of denunciation by Democrats and of execration by a large part of the people of this country. I recognized then, as I acknowledge now, that it is impossible to conduct the business of a parliamentary body unless the majority have complete control of its procedure and exercise it in their own way. That I concede absolutely and unreservedly; but the corollary of that proposition is equally true. There must be no doubt that it is a majority which actually exercises control. The majority must always be ready to establish the fact that it is a majority. It has no warrant for control except the fact that it is the majority. Now, sir, under existing conditions, the majority is never required to establish the fact that it is the majority but once, and that is on the opening day of the session, when a motion is carried that the rules of the last House be made the rules of this one. That is carried by a majority vote, and the moment that vote is recorded the control of this body passes from its actual majority—that is to say, from a majority of the House or even from a majority of the majority—into the hands of a majority of the Committee on Rules.

That is the practical effect of the rules as they stand. Well may the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] state, and no man can question it, that under this system Representatives can shield themselves behind the procedure of the House while quietly stifling legislation which they would not dare oppose openly in full view of their constituents.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman illustrate by cases in his own mind where the majority, the moment that we have adopted the rules of the House, passed their power to the Committee on Rules, and that power was taken away from the majority of the House?

Mr. COCKRAN. My only objection to doing that is that it will consume a lot of time in establishing facts which I think must be obvious to the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman state one?

Mr. COCKRAN. What I stated, Mr. Chairman, was this, to begin with; not that the majority have absolutely lost control of the House in the sense that any action can be taken against its will or without its consent. That is a totally different proposition. Any affirmative action by the House of course requires the vote of a majority. But to defeat a measure effectively, to prevent absolutely any chance of its being enacted, or even considered, it need but encounter the hostility of the Committee on Rules, or rather of its majority. Nay, to render its prospects hopeless the Committee on Rules need not be actively hostile; it is enough that a majority of that committee is indifferent. What I do state is that there are no means known to our procedure by which, when a proposal of legislation submitted by me is arrested, deprived of any prospect that it can be enacted into law, I can challenge the opposition to show that it is a majority of the House which antagonizes it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall any case under the rules where the Committee on Rules can do anything without appealing to a majority of the House?

Mr. COCKRAN. That is quite true, Mr. Chairman. It can not do anything, but it can refuse to do everything; and its refusal is of deadly effect to legislative propositions. Let us see just exactly what occurs. Gentlemen here on both sides have challenged me to give an instance where the procedure of the House enabled opponents of measures to defeat them without opposing them openly on the floor. I will give one or two. There is one that has been mentioned here time and again, the proposition to put wood pulp on the free list. I myself have offered, again and again, measures against which I know there could not have been five votes recorded in this House, and yet these measures have never come before the House. Why? Because under the procedure of the House not merely the Committee on Rules, but all the other committees, are sitting upon them with an effect of weight and inertia that is absolutely immovable. [Laughter.] There is not a gentleman here, including the gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. ALEXANDER], who can not go back to his constituency to-morrow and protest his earnest enthusiasm for my measures and blame his refusal to vote for them upon the procedure of the House. Now, that is an abuse and a serious one. Anything that can be interposed between the discharge of a Representative's duty and full knowledge by his constituents of how he discharges it is a grave abuse upon the representative system.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] have asked me to explain how this procedure stifles the voice of the House. I have introduced a measure here for the publicity of campaign expenses before elections, which will serve to illustrate the abuse of which I complain. Now, what was the procedure there? It went to a committee appointed by the Speaker. There it slumbers. All my efforts to arouse it have but sufficed to provoke some expressions of weariness from the Members whom I importuned. But let us suppose I could have moved that committee, assuming that the Speaker is hostile to it, what then? Suppose I could have moved that committee appointed by the Speaker to report a measure favorably which the Speaker condemns. What good would it do me?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman take away from the Speaker the power to appoint the committees?

Mr. COCKRAN. No, sir; I would not. As I stated at the beginning, notwithstanding the existence of these defects in our rules that can not be disputed, the change in procedure which any sensible committee could recommend would, in my judgment, be exceedingly slight and narrow, and yet I think some changes would be very effective and very salutary. Now, I said, when a measure goes before a committee, the Speaker being hostile to it, the committee, it may fairly be assumed, will sit upon it. But suppose the committee should be moved by a virtuous independent impulse and should report it favorably. How far have I got then? Why, I have reached the tail end of the calendar, where I have just about as much chance of getting that measure before this House without affirmative action by the Committee on Rules as I have of being translated to heaven like the Prophet Elijah. [Laughter.] But suppose even that the Committee on Rules should break away from the Speaker—and I do not think that such an event is conceivable. I do not believe it is thinkable. [Laughter.] I want to say, in all candor, I do not think it would be honorable.

I think when a Member of the majority accepts from the Speaker a place on the Committee on Rules, he takes an honorable obligation to exercise the power such an appointment bestows on him to keep the Speaker's control of the House absolute. I am quite willing to concede that. But suppose the Committee on Rules, or a majority of it, did break away from the Speaker, how much further would that bring me? I would still be far from a certainty of securing consideration for the measure. I would still find it necessary to devise some manner of chain or fetter which I could fasten on the Speaker's eye and hold it until the member of the Committee on Rules desiring to present its report had obtained the floor to move consideration and adoption of its recommendation that my measure be taken up for consideration and that a vote be taken on it. If anyone can suggest a method by which the Speaker's eye can be caught, fastened, held for a purpose which he himself condemns, I shall be glad to give that ingenious person the floor, that he might enlighten us and gladden us. And so we can not escape the conclusion that, so far as affirmative action is concerned, this House is absolutely in the hands of the Speaker. For such a condition I do not think there is precedent or parallel anywhere at any time. We have heard during the debate a great deal about the procedure of the House of Commons and much about the greater attention given to its debates and the greater consequence enjoyed by its members.

Mr. Chairman, these differences are inherent; they do not spring from any difference in rules. The inherent difference between the two bodies is that the House of Commons controls absolutely the executive department of the English Government. It is itself, through one of its committees, the executive, as well as the legislative, department. By the exercise of a single vote it can overthrow a government and immediately effect a complete change of administration, for the Government itself is only a committee of the house.

This body can not discharge from his office a single executive officer. It certainly can not overthrow a Cabinet or force the resignation of a single Cabinet minister.

Some people say that the distinction between these two bodies is that we are governed or managed by committees, and the House of Commons is not. Why, in all its legislation of a public character the House of Commons is managed by one committee. That committee is the Government. So far as legislation is concerned we have simply divided among several committees the powers which in that body are held by one.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman suggests having a majority of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COCKRAN. I did not suggest it. The gentleman is mistaken. I have not come to my suggestions yet; I have not got past my criticisms. [Laughter.] The gentleman is entirely mistaken if he thinks I have suggested anything.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman come to his suggestions?

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman will allow the committee and myself to decide when we shall come to suggestions, I will be delighted to say yes. But if he means that I must come to them now, I beg him to let me reach them in my own way.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. COCKRAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If the Committee on Rules agreed with the gentleman that his bill should be brought before the House, what would occur next?

Mr. COCKRAN. I hope the gentleman from New York would vote for it; in point of fact, I am sure he would. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Would I get a chance to vote for it?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can only reecho the question propounded years ago in a Republican convention, "What are we here for?" What are you here for? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If I had a chance to vote for it, then the Speaker would not be controlling the action of the House.

Mr. COCKRAN. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I can not follow the gentleman to his conclusions. His manner of proceeding from a premise which has been undisclosed to a conclusion which is preposterous is far beyond the reach of my intellectuals. [Laughter.] I beg the gentleman to realize that what I say is in perfect good faith and with the utmost affection for him personally. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I suggest that the gentleman is very likely right that it would be preposterous, but that was his own suggestion at the outset which I desired him to come back to. In his supposition he got to the Committee on Rules, and then he branched off on something else. I simply desire to call him back to his original suggestion that if he obtained a majority of the Committee on Rules to allow him to bring his measure before the House and Members had a chance to vote upon it, would it not show that the House, at that time at least, was not controlled by the Speaker?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, if my suggestion was preposterous, I can only say that its character in that respect did not become conspicuous until the gentleman undertook to deal with it. [Laughter.] As a matter of fact, I made no such suggestion as the gentleman imputes to me. What I did state was this: If the Committee on Rules became so far independent as to break away from control of the Speaker, and actually undertook, against his wish, to report a rule providing for consideration of that measure, they could not get the floor until the Speaker recognized them, and, under such conditions, he would not recognize them. That was what I stated. Even assuming the Committee on Rules favored the measure there was but one way in which it could be brought before the House and that was by finding some device or some plan to catch the Speaker's eye and hold it long enough to get recognition.

If the gentleman has discovered a modus by which that tremendous feat can be accomplished, he will do very much toward simplifying this discussion and smoothing away all discontent. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I thank the gentleman for answering my question at last.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] concede that the Committee on Rules has the right to the floor, and that its report is privileged?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; privileged provided the Speaker will recognize them.

Mr. OLMSTED. And it being a privileged matter, the visual organ of the Speaker is bound to rest on the chairman of that committee, and no Speaker would dare to do otherwise.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, the gentleman makes two statements. He says the visual organ is bound to do something, and that no Speaker would dare do otherwise. Any man who can bind that visual organ has succeeded in accomplishing a feat to which I can not hope to aspire. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think any Speaker's eye has ever failed to rest on a man who rose to a privileged matter.

Mr. COCKRAN. There the gentleman is speaking of something that is usual. I am speaking, not of what may be usual, but of what is possible.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is required by the rules.

Mr. COCKRAN. I differ with the gentleman. It is not, and I can not conceive how rules could be framed which would inform the Speaker when a Member gets up on the floor whether he is charged with a privileged resolution or any other motion. Certainly there is nothing in the existing rules providing for any cut of his garments, any arrangement of his hair, or peculiarity of attitude that would be accepted as indicating decisively whether he is rising to a question that is privileged or one that is simply interesting to himself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must be aware that a statement that a matter is privileged calls the attention of the Speaker to it, and under the rule if the Speaker should not recognize a matter that is privileged it is the right under the rule for any Member of the House to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and a majority of the House can sustain the appeal. So it does not rest with the Speaker to determine——

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not care to waste time in discussing an abstraction like that. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows perfectly well that the situation he describes is so improbable that it is not a practical subject of discussion. Neither is the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] in his speech this morning, that it always remains with a majority of the House to set aside every other measure on the calendar—refuse to consider any bill whatever—until the one which the majority is anxious to dispose of should be reached. That we all know is theoretically possible, but practically it is impossible and unthinkable. Nor does that cover the point which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has made so forcibly. It does not compel the majority, if there be one, which opposes the measure to come out openly and vote against it. You can not present to this House the direct question, Shall these various measures be set aside so as to take up House bill so-and-so? You can not put such a motion.

The question of consideration, if raised against a measure, can not be presented in such a form. The only question that can be submitted to the House is the naked one, Shall such a measure be considered—not shall it be considered in preference to some other measure that is pending, or shall it and all others be set aside, that some particular bill far down on the calendar may first be taken up and passed. To accomplish practically what the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests, Members must vote to set aside every other bill, including bills which they themselves have introduced, not, so far as the record would show, for the purpose of passing some particular measure of capital importance, but without explanation of any kind. The condition of exercising this power, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania considers effective, is that many a man must write himself down disloyal to his own measures. That is a condition which can not be met. When the gentleman describes it he shows conclusively that the remedy of which it is an essential feature is beyond the reach of practical or actual application.

I am perfectly willing to concede the force of much—indeed, of most—that has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. I realize that it would be impossible to have every measure introduced by Members here considered or to take a vote upon each one. I do believe, however, that some means should be provided by which any substantial portion of the House could challenge the majority to a vote on any proposal of public importance, so that it would either be passed into law or else the Members who defeated it must oppose it openly and record their opposition.

I think it is little short of an outrage upon our representative system that the files of our committees should be piled high with measures which the Members here would not dare vote against on the floor, but which they can aid in stifling by sitting silent behind the Committee on Rules and the machinery of the House. That is the one defect in our procedure which I think can be remedied completely by an amendment of the rules.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests that a majority of the House in writing should be empowered to demand consideration of a measure. That certainly would be an improvement on existing conditions, but I do not think it would be a complete reform. I think something more effective and less cumbersome in the way of ascertaining the existence of a majority should be provided.

When a number of Members equal to that required to order the yeas and nays second a motion to take up a measure for consideration, that of itself should be sufficient to insure a vote—not a debate—but a vote on the proposal. Whether any discussion be allowed on any subject is absolutely within the discretion of the majority. The minority are not entitled to debate or to anything except the right to be counted—to be assured that they are but a minority. The House alone has the right to say whether debate is necessary or desirable for its enlightenment. If it believes debate is essential to the proper exercise of its functions, then debate should be ordered. But the ordering of debate or the refusal to permit it, the extent to which it should be allowed when it is ordered, is always a matter of discretion for the House, and therefore a matter to be decided by the majority. But, again, I repeat it must be always clear that it is a majority—an actual majority—on a particular proposal that determines its disposition.

It is not enough to say that the Members sitting on this side of the House are a majority of it, and that they voted to establish the Committee on Rules. There is no such thing as a permanent majority contemplated by a parliamentary system. In contemplation of the Constitution this body approaches every question submitted to it free from any tie or limitation, political or personal, on its action—deciding every motion on its own merits. A majority has no prescribed term of existence. It exists just as long as its members cooperate. But the only way continuance of this cooperation, and, therefore, continued existence of a majority or minority, can be shown is by a vote. Where power to demand a vote on any measure is denied, it is impossible to ascertain whether it is a majority or a minority that obstructs its passage. This disposition to assume the existence of a permanent majority or minority here has always bred much confusion of thought. When the Reed rules were under discussion here we heard a great deal about the majority and the minority, especially about "the rights of the minority."

I was not a Member of the Fifty-first Congress where the Reed rules were first adopted, but I did serve in the Fifty-second, and I well remember the extended debate upon a motion to adopt the same rules. The Republican membership had then shrunk to a very small minority. The dividing line between the parties here was not the center of the House, but this aisle where I am standing. The minority offered a resolution that the rules of the former House, known as the "Reed rules," should apply to that Congress. The debate that followed turned largely on what was described as "the rights of the minority." Now, in that debate I ventured to point out what I think is equally true now, that you can not vest the minority with rights which the majority do not enjoy and still keep it a minority. For if the minority have rights which the majority are denied, Members would all hasten to join the minority, which would then become a majority and lose at once its identity as a minority and its rights. [Laughter.]

The moment you attach anything like permanence to a majority or a minority you emasculate, if you do not destroy, the vigor of a parliamentary body. A majority should be held to exist only while it is able to show that it exists. No representative chamber can be considered properly organized for legislation while its procedure is controlled, not by a majority of all its members, but by a majority of a small subcommittee. It seems to me there should be no objection to such an amendment of the rules as would enable a vote to be obtained on any important public question when the motion to consider it is seconded by a substantial portion of our membership. If it be considered that it would take too much of the time essential for legislation were one-fifth of those present empowered to secure a roll call upon a given question, then at least this power should be conceded to the whole body of the minority in its entirety. I believe it is absolutely essential to the representative character of your House that the minority, through its recognized leader, should have the right, within proper restrictions, to demand a vote upon any proposal submitted to this House.

Sir, many bills submitted to this House since I have been here that failed of passage would have been approved by substantial majorities if a vote upon them could have been taken. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] can probably recall one or two that few Members would have ventured to vote against, but which were stifled in committee. They failed, not because the House was opposed to them; not because a majority of the House was not eager to vote for them; but because all power of the House to deal with them was strangled in its own machinery. If any gentleman here would like me to specify some of those bills which, though favored by a majority, were never suffered to reach a vote let him rise in his seat and I will undertake to mention one for which he himself would have voted if an opportunity had been given the minority to challenge the sense of the House upon every question of public importance that had been offered for its action.

Mr. Chairman, I am far from saying or insinuating that the decline in importance which has undoubtedly overtaken this legislative body is due entirely to its rules.

Legislative bodies have declined in importance and in consequence everywhere. That seems to be in obedience to a general law. It would appear as though every instrumentality which society has found effective at some stage of its progress begins to decline when the great purpose for which it was peculiarly qualified has been accomplished. The last century and the last quarter of the preceding century were periods in which grave questions affecting radically the structure of government were subjects of excited debate everywhere throughout Christendom. The right of kings to hold their thrones; the right of classes to be exempt from certain burdens of the state; the right of some individuals to hold public offices of power and consequence by inheritance rather than by any merits of their own; the right of some men to enjoy privileges denied to their fellows; all those were questions for the settlement of which representative bodies were peculiarly well qualified. But to-day they are settled. They are no longer issues over which men or societies are divided. Equality of fundamental rights is now the law governing nations everywhere throughout Christendom.

The great business of legislative bodies—the establishment of this equality—has been accomplished. The function of legislation in the future must necessarily be less important. It must be confined largely to matters of administration and to problems purely economic. For that reason we can not reasonably expect to see another Henry Clay develop in this body, since there are no longer controversies like those affecting the extension of slavery over new territories of vast extent to be compromised. We can not expect to hear great debates on the nature of our Union, now that its indissolubility is forever established beyond question or discussion.

But there remains this wide field of administrative and economic problems upon which legislative powers can still be exercised with decisive advantage to the country and very considerable credit to this House. Surely, sir, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] well says, to fix the conditions under which functions so important shall be exercised should not be deemed a party question. In all our proceedings we are playing for a great stake. We are striving for popular approval and for the success which follows it. Both parties in this House are laboring to win a majority in the next House. They are contending for a noble prize when they seek to gain control of the popular branch of the Government. But surely we should have no differences about the conditions under which the contest is to be waged. It is well that we should contend earnestly for the prize, but it is absolutely necessary that we agree upon rules which will make that prize worth the winning, whichever party be successful in achieving it.

I am soon to leave this body. I shall carry out of it, I think, the pleasantest recollections of my whole life. I shall always recall with pride the fact that I have been honored with membership in it. For I believe firmly that if it were given a fair chance to show the qualities it possesses, there is not a representative body in all the world that could compare with it in its ability to discuss questions, its wisdom in considering them, its virtue in dealing with them. [Applause.] If to-morrow it were placed in control of its own procedure, so that its actual majority could decide what questions would be considered, within such limits, of course, as to prevent misuse and waste of time, this House might not become as important or as interesting as the Congresses that preceded the war, but it will become the first representative body in all Christendom. [Applause.]

The main argument—the only argument—in favor of transferring control of the House from the majority of all its Members to a majority of the Committee on Rules is the necessity of providing some method for economizing time. Mr. Chairman, if the time that is wasted in this House were employed properly, there is not one question of importance that could not receive all the consideration it merited. In what we are doing at this moment we offer a striking illustration of the imbecility to which the House has been reduced by some of its rules and the waste of time that follows inevitably. The matter that is pending before the House at present is the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Here we have been engaged in a discussion full of interest—outside of my own contribution to it—yet it does not touch a question that is before the House or that can come before it, except by grace of the Committee on Rules. We can not record a vote on this most important proposal, however thoroughly convinced we may be of its urgency; a proposal, sir, whose significance was never more clearly established than by you this afternoon standing in your place on the floor.

Now, I am aware this House is very sensitive about curtailing the limits of general debate. But I think we should remember general debates on appropriation bills had their origin in a condition and a system that we have abolished. General debate in the English House of Commons on an appropriation bill turns upon every question of administration. How? Because as each item is presented to the House it furnishes an occasion for debate as to conditions that may be imposed upon it. Sometimes, and it is a very common way of expressing disapproval, a motion is made that the salary of a cabinet minister be reduced. When the motion prevails, it is accepted as a vote of censure on the Government, entailing almost invariably its overthrow. Sometimes a law of paramount importance is passed in the form of a condition attached to an appropriation. I may say, going back further in parliamentary history, that all the prerogatives of which the Crown has been shorn were all taken from different Kings through conditions imposed on appropriation bills.

Quite naturally general debate on the whole state of the Kingdom became a feature of each application for the means to carry on government when every shilling granted was accompanied with the strictest scrutiny of the purposes for which it was to be expended and frequently made the subject of conditions imposed by Parliament.

But, sir, this power of imposing conditions on grants of money for the support of government we have surrendered by our own act.

We have abolished by rule the power to incorporate any new legislation in appropriation bills. With us general debate has therefore come to be merely an occasion where Members ventilate their views on various matters for the edification of their constituents, but seldom, if ever, with reference to any measure actually before the House. By regulating those general debates so that matters of actual importance should take precedence of abstract irrelevant discussions, ample time would be afforded, not merely to take a vote where the existence of a majority was challenged by a responsible source, but ample time for such discussion as would suffice to make clear the nature of any proposal on which the judgment of the House was challenged.

For my part, I would be perfectly willing to vote for a rule prohibiting absolutely any discussion that did not touch some proposition actually pending before the House. [Applause.] We are not here to debate abstractions or waste time listening to irrelevant orations, but we are here to consider proposals of legislation affecting the general welfare of the community. If there be nothing for us to do but vote appropriations upon which we refuse to impose any conditions, then it is due to the peace of the country that this potential disturbance to business incidental to every session of Congress and the consequent widespread fear of new legislation should be removed by prompt adjournment. [Laughter.]

I have little sympathy with schemes that merely facilitate legislation. I must say that the statistics presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, now occupying the chair, showing that 10,000 measures passed through the last Congress, to me was a display of activity not inspiring, but alarming—almost shocking.

Mr. SIMS. I should like to ask the gentleman to address himself to what seems to me an inevitable and terrible abuse, and that is the passing of omnibus pension bills and omnibus claims bills, in which most vicious sections must be taken or the whole bill be defeated.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is more familiar with that sort of legislation than I am. Abuses of that character will creep into the operations of a parliamentary body. The gentleman can describe them better than I. I am confining myself to a single suggestion for amending the rules, consideration of which, I think, would be particularly appropriate at this time. There has never been a time when party issues seemed to be so faint as at this moment.

I congratulate the majority on holding the offices of this Government while at the same time preparing to enforce our views and principles—at least to a great extent. [Laughter.] If the new tariff bill to be reported by the Committee on Ways and Means prove as radical a measure of reform as stated by the newspapers, and as the speeches of the President-elect have foreshadowed, and I may say as the bearing of the majority members of the committee indicated during the hearings just concluded, party distinctions are fainter than I recollect them to have been during the last generation. Surely this is an opportune season for considering impartially the rules by which the House is governed. When we realize the great masses of capital embarked in corporate enterprise, and the concentration of vast interests in the hands of a very few, raising more complex questions of government than the human race has ever considered, surely the moment has arrived when the House should make at least an impartial inquiry as to whether its procedure can be improved, made more effective for wholesome legislation. I repeat I do not contend that the power of the majority to control ought to be curtailed in the slightest degree.

I believe it is absolutely essential to any parliamentary form of government that control of the majority be absolute and unchecked; that only one condition should be imposed upon it. It should be required to show that it is actually a majority at the time it is undertaking to exercise control—not merely that it had been a majority on the first day of the session. If machinery can be provided by which the existence—the continued existence—of a majority is established, then, sir, it is proper and necessary that full responsibility for every exercise of power should be left with that majority. [Applause.] Nay, more, exercise of that power should be fastened on the majority; not merely conceded, but imposed upon it.

Thus only can the country be placed in a position where it can require from its servants full account of the stewardship with which they have been intrusted.

One gentleman asked me a question which at the time I was prevented by an interruption from answering fully: Would I abolish the power of the Speaker to appoint committees? No, sir; I would not. There must be a leadership of every body. Leadership of the Speaker would be evolved from the inherent powers of his office by the very nature of human beings if it were not established by any special rule. There never have been any number of human beings charged with a common function where some one or two of them did not assume leadership and practically decide, subject to approval by the others, the course finally pursued. Any gentleman who has ever tried a case before a jury knows that when a verdict is recorded it is usually the verdict of one man, approved by the others. Where there is a hung jury, it means that two men of such mental strength that neither one would give way to the other met in the jury room and clashed, with the result that the body divided into followers of one or the other and did nothing. We must have leadership if we are to do anything. We can not act with 395 heads and pairs of hands all moving and talking at the same time. We must act through one of our number, and that one is the medium or agent by which the power of the House is made effective.

It would not improve the present condition if, in addition to electing the Speaker and charging him with judicial functions, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] suggests, we elected another man to serve as leader upon the floor in legislative matters. That would be simply choosing two men to perform the work that one performs a great deal better. I do not think any man here has a right to complain of the equipment or constitution of the committees. The powers they possess may well be criticised. I do not think that the personnel could be improved by a change.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to hear the gentleman on this question: Should the power be lodged in the Speaker, whether Democrat or Republican, to say that, although a majority of this House wants to take up and consider a bill, the Speaker shall refuse to give recognition and thus prevent consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRAN. I am afraid the gentleman must have been out of the Chamber when I was discussing that very question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am sorry to say that I was not able to be present during the fore part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, it would have been just as well if the gentleman had asked a neighbor whether the matter had been discussed before propounding his question. I have been discussing it at very great length, and what I have been contending for is this——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Anything the gentleman from New York says will bear repeating. I should like to hear him repeat it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite know how to take that; but, considering its source, which I know to be always a fountain of benevolence and joy, I believe it is said with the most complimentary intention, and as such I accept it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, let me repeat here that while I believe the power of the Speaker should not be curtailed, so far as the appointment of committees is concerned, and so far as charging him with responsibility for the accomplishment of legislation, yet I think it is an outrage upon representative government that any man or men, any Speaker or a majority of the Committee on Rules, can prevent this House from ascertaining, somehow or other, at some time or other, whether any measure offered for its consideration is opposed or approved by a majority of its membership.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, in the public building bill——

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman from Tennessee must realize that suppression of the desire of a majority to consider that bill is one among the things of which I complain; and my whole argument is that if that one abuse could be remedied, the procedure of this House is about as good as could be devised. I began with the statement and I close with it, that I think it would conduce to the excellence of the work to be performed by this House, it would increase the consequence of the Speaker, it would facilitate his task in organizing the next House, if a committee were appointed now, representing both sides of the Chamber, composed of the most experienced parliamentarians, and charged with the duty to report, either to this House or to the next, an entire system of rules. I doubt whether there would be any change in the existing rules, except possibly the one that I suggest.

Mr. Chairman, I do not for one moment insist that the remedy suggested by me is the one that should be adopted. It might be that such a committee would evolve a much better plan for reaching the same end. All that I suggest is and all that I care about is this: Some plan should be devised by which the House can always ascertain if the force claiming to control it is actually a majority; that majority should not be ascertained at the beginning of a session and then presumed for the rest of the session; it should be established by a vote on every proposal when any sensible proportion of our membership challenges its existence.

I think that the number requisite to order the yeas and nays should be considered sufficient to call for a vote on any question; but if that be considered extravagant, then certainly it would conduce enormously to the dignity of the House and to the value of its procedure if, on motion of the leader of the minority, any measure of public importance could be called up and a vote taken on the question of considering it. If such a motion be defeated, it would be defeated by the majority; if the measure be set aside, it would be set aside by the majority. I do not even insist that the measure should be actually considered by the House; all that I do insist is that the proposal to consider it should be submitted to the House for its action; that the leader of the minority could, on a certain notice, move that a certain measure be considered, and on that be entitled to a vote after such debate or discussion as the majority chose to allow. With that amendment, I believe, Mr. Chairman, these rules would be found entirely effective for the conduct of the House and that the work of the House would enjoy added value in the eyes of the community as it became more clearly, distinctly, and unmistakably the product, not of a small committee operating by cunningly devised machinery, but of free, untrammeled, spontaneous action by a majority of the membership of the House. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks this calendar of the British House of Commons, together with House resolution 473, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania called attention.

BATTLEFIELD PARK AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. FOSTER. I present concurrent resolutions adopted at the session of the general assembly of Louisiana in 1908, favoring the enactment of legislation for the establishment of a national park on the battlefield of New Orleans, etc. I ask that the concurrent resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The concurrent resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate and house concurrent resolutions memorializing the Congress of the United States, adopted at the session of the general assembly of Louisiana in 1908, and requiring the secretary of state to send copies thereof to the United States Senators and Representatives from Louisiana.

[Act No. 78. House concurrent resolution 27. By Mr. Roy, of St. Bernard.]

Whereas the great victory achieved by the American arms at the battle of New Orleans on the 8th day of January, 1815, whereby an invading army was driven from our shores, the far-reaching result of which redounded to the glory and expansion of the country; and

Whereas through the valor of American arms the State of Louisiana, as well as the vast territory west of the Mississippi River, was saved from the grasp of monarchial government; and

Whereas it is deemed of the highest importance to preserve the memory of this victory and to impress upon the youth of our country the national importance of the momentous issues involved: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and are hereby, requested to enact legislation necessary to establish and maintain a national park on the scene of this historic battle; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution, together with its preamble, to the Congress of the United States and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen of the State of Louisiana.

Approved June 30, 1908.

[Act No. 175. House concurrent resolution 30. By Mr. Roy, of St. Bernard.]

Whereas New Orleans ranks in the forefront of the great and important seaports in the world and is endowed with unsurpassed advantages and modern and extensive shipping facilities, by reason of which fact the southern metropolis stands unexcelled as a commercial center; and

Whereas New Orleans is the gateway of the vast Mississippi Valley and the rich and productive territory contiguous to it, which supplies, to a large extent, domestic and foreign markets with indispensable commodities; and

Whereas it is deemed advisable and wise that the defenses of the Mississippi Valley at Forts St. Philip and Jackson, near the mouth of the Mississippi River, be modernized and enlarged, so as to keep pace with the increasing wealth, commercial importance, and prestige of the large expanse of territory constituting the Mississippi Valley and to afford proper and adequate protection from invasion by a foreign foe in the event of hostilities; and

Whereas it is desirable and imperative that the armament recommended by the Coast Defense Board in 1905, which includes new disappearing guns, mine defenses, power plants, and the modernizing of old emplacements, involving an expenditure of nearly a million dollars, be constructed as soon as practicable: Therefore be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Louisiana, That the honorable the Secretary of War of the United States be requested to use his best efforts to carry out, with the least delay possible, the plans submitted and approved by the Coast Defense Board of the United States and to bring about the consummation of all the improvements at Forts St. Philip and Jackson, in accordance with the recommendations of the said Coast Defense Board: Be it further Resolved, etc., That the secretary of state be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution, with its preamble, to the honorable the Secretary of War and to each of the Senators and Congressmen of the State of Louisiana.

Approved July 3, 1908.

[Act. No. 222. Senate concurrent resolution 11. By Mr. Marks.]

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Louisiana (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to cause to be closed and to erect a dam across Bayou Courtableau, on the west bank of the Atchafalaya Basin levee district, for the purpose of enabling the said Atchafalaya Basin levee district to protect, by levee and otherwise, its arable territory from overflow: Be it further Resolved, etc., That a copy of this memorial be forwarded without delay by the secretary of state to the two United States Senators and all the Representatives in Congress from this State.

Approved July 8, 1908.

[Act No. 272. Senate concurrent resolution 12. By Mr. McCulloh.]

Be it resolved by the senate of Louisiana (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Members of Congress be, and they are hereby, memorialized and requested to present to Congress at its next session, and to endeavor to have passed through that body, a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the public lands of the United States situated in this State, the proceeds of the sale thereof to be used in the support of the common schools of Louisiana, and the grant, if made, not to affect or interfere with the claim of any person who has anterior thereto initiated a homestead claim, to proceed as if the grant had not been made, and title to the land included in the homestead to rest in the State of Louisiana only in case the homestead be, and for any cause, canceled.

Approved July 9, 1908.

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass a law that will correct the abuses of cotton-future trading and insure a fair and honest contract for the delivery of cotton.

[Act No. 312. House concurrent resolution 33. By Mr. Smith.]

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, memorialized to urge Congress to enact a law establishing a national standard of classification of the marketable grades of cotton, upon which standard all arbitrations on contract deliveries must be made, prohibiting any contract on which can be delivered unmarketable cotton, or useless stuff, or cotton of a value uncertain and not readily ascertainable, and providing that all cotton delivered on contract shall be paid for on the basis of actual difference in the spot value of the grades delivered on the market and at the time of delivery: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of state to the several Senators and Congressmen from the State of Louisiana in the Congress of the United States.

Approved July 9, 1908.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7073) to compensate H. D. Chapman and J. W. Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3164) to correct the military record of Paul Sinock, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 726) thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23711) to build a bridge across the Santee River, South Carolina, reported it without amendment.

WILLIAM T. ROSSELL, JR., AND HARRY G. WEAVER.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7486) authorizing the President to reinstate William T. Rossell, jr., and Harry G. Weaver as cadets in the United States Military Academy, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 724) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is a very short bill. It has the unanimous approval of the committee and the recommendation of the Secretary of War. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama what class these cadets belong to? I was not at the meeting of the Military Affairs Committee yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSTON. They are of the first class. There is an amendment to the bill as reported by the Senator from Massachusetts which puts these cadets on the same terms as the other cadets.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to have the Senator from Alabama state the reasons for reinstating these cadets. I was not present at the meeting of the committee yesterday, but I have a letter in which there is great objection urged to reinstating cadets when they have once been suspended or dismissed.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say that the report of the committee was unanimous.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DICK. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 106) authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, and so forth, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 725) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator what is the necessity for haste in the consideration of this measure.

Mr. SCOTT. The Inaugural Committee want to know where they are going to have space so as to have the arrangement made in time. The joint resolution is in conformity with joint resolutions that have been passed ever since 1885. It follows the exact language of the former measures.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was diverted for a moment, and I did not catch the purport of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a joint resolution reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask that it be read again, if it is not very long?

Mr. SCOTT. It is a long bill.

Mr. LODGE. Does it relate to the arrangements for the inauguration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. LODGE. Then it ought to be referred to the Committee on Rules, because they have charge of all the arrangements here. It ought to go to that committee.

Mr. SCOTT. Let it go to the Committee on Rules, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. It is a report from a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. The Committee on Rules, as is well known, have charge of all the inaugural ceremonies at the Capitol.

Mr. SCOTT. This does not relate to the ceremonies at the Capitol.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw my suggestion if it does not relate to arrangements here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does not relate to arrangements at the Capitol.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me a minute, I will state that it is a facsimile of measures that have been passed for every inaugural occasion since 1885. I was so informed this morning. There is an addition of $3,000, which is asked for in order to protect the city and the visitors here during the time of the inauguration.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator object to letting it go over so that we can look at it?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8143) granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 722) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] to the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may have present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID R. B. WINNIFORD.

Winniford, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 723) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Louisiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That David R. B. Winniford shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of Company D, Eighth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, on October 24, 1864. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant to said David R. B. Winniford an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 22306) to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

Mr. KEAN. That is a bridge bill; the work is ready to progress, and we would like to keep as many people employed at the present time as possible. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 7, 1909.

TENNESSEE COAL AND IRON COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the resolution that went over under objection yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution No. 243, submitted yesterday by Mr. CULBERSON, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, as early as may be practicable, whether, in the opinion of the committee, the President was authorized to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel Corporation, as is shown by the message of the President in response to Senate resolution No. 240, this session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the resolution pass?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, upon looking over the resolution, I confess that I fail to see any reason for its adoption by the Senate or in sending it to the committee. The letter of the President, accompanying his message, covers the matter fully, and the resolution states something that is at variance with the letter of the President. The resolution requests an opinion from the Committee on the Judiciary as to whether the President was authorized to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company. The letter of the President denies that he permitted any such thing. In his letter he says in reference to that:

I answered that while, of course, I could not advise them to take the action proposed, I felt it no duty of mine to interpose any objection.

The President was entirely noncommittal on that. It seems to me that no information or good can come from the adoption of this resolution. I therefore move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay," if he were present.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I stated, I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Burkett	Depew	Kean	Richardson
Carter	Dixon	McCumber	Warner
Cummins	du Pont	Penrose
Curtis	Hopkins	Platt

NAYS—47.

Aldrich	Dillingham	Long	Rayner
Bacon	Foraker	McCreary	Scott
Bankhead	Frazier	McEnery	Simmons
Borah	Frye	McLaurin	Smith, Md.
Bulkeley	Fulton	Money	Stephenson
Burnham	Gamble	Nelson	Sutherland
Burrows	Gary	Newlands	Taliaferro
Clapp	Gore	Overman	Taylor
Clark, Wyo.	Hale	Page	Teller
Clay	Johnston	Paynter	Warren
Culberson	Kittredge	Perkins	Wetmore
Dick	Lodge	Piles

NOT VOTING—31.

Ankeny	Crane	Gallinger	Milton
Bailey	Cullom	Guggenheim	Nixon
Beveridge	Daniel	Hansbrough	Owen
Bourne	Davis	Hemenway	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Dolliver	Heyburn	Smoot
Briggs	Elkins	Knox	Stone
Brown	Flint	La Follette	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Foster	Martin

So Mr. HOPKINS's motion to lay Mr. CULBERSON's resolution on the table was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the passage of the resolution of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLAPP. Not having been in the Chamber when the resolution was read, I should like to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, as early as may be practicable, whether, in the opinion of the committee, the President was authorized to permit the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel Corporation, as is shown by the message of the President in response to Senate resolution No. 240, this session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THIRTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 16954.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but the Senator from Kansas will remember that the bill upon the calendar immediately preceding this has been read and fully discussed, and it occurs to me that that bill should be disposed of.

Mr. LONG. I asked for unanimous consent to take up the bill I have named. We were not upon the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I am not objecting to the census bill, but I think I shall object to considering any bill by unanimous consent, after this important bill is out of the way, until the bill which, as I have indicated, has already been considered shall be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LONG. I did not understand that the Senator from Wyoming objected.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I did not object.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, what is the bill for which the Senator from Kansas asks consideration? Is it the census bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the census bill.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to object to that; but I think the orderly method is, when a bill comes up under Rule VIII, to have it read for the information of the Senate, and after it is read is the proper time to object to its consideration, unless Senators see fit to object before. If this bill is to be read in that way, subject to objection, I think that is perfectly proper—not that I expect to object to it, but I want to proceed in an orderly manner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, the bill will be read for amendment, and the committee amendments will be first considered. The bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole, subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Census with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 9, after the word "statistician," to insert "a geographer;" and in line 17, after the word "President," to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That after June 30, 1909, and during the decennial census period only, there may be employed in the Census Office, in addition to the force provided for by the act of March 6, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," an assistant director, who shall be an experienced practical statistician; a geographer, a chief statistician, who shall be a person of known and tried experience in statistical work, an appointment clerk, a private secretary to the director, 2 stenographers, and 8 expert chiefs of division. These officers, with the exception of the assistant director, shall be appointed without examination by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census. The assistant director shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 3, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "three thousand," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That during the decennial census period the annual compensation of the officials of the Census Office shall be as follows: The Director of the Census, $7,500; the private secretary to the Director, $2,500; the Assistant Director, $5,000; the chief statisticians, $3,500 each; the chief clerk, $3,000; the disbursing clerk, $3,000; the appointment clerk, $3,000; the geographer, $3,000; the chiefs of division, $2,250 each; and the stenographers provided for in section 3 of this act, $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 6, line 6, before the word "school," to insert "whether or not employer or employee;" in line 8, after the word "army," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" and in the same line, after the word "navy," to insert "and for the enumeration of institutions, shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, and inmates of benevolent institutions;" so as to read:

SEC. 8. That the Thirteenth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to manufactures, and to mines and quarries. The schedules relating to population shall include for each inhabitant the name, relationship to head of family, color, sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, place of birth of parents, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employee, school attendance, literacy, and tenure of home and whether or not a survivor of the Union or Confederate army or navy; and for the enumeration of institutions, shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, and inmates of benevolent institutions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. In that paragraph there is a committee amendment not shown in the text of the bill. In section 8, page 6, line 4, after the word "birth," I move to insert the word "race."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 6, line 4, after the word "birth," it is proposed to insert the word "race."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that section, but I understand the committee prefers to complete the committee amendments first.

Mr. LONG. Yes. The Senator will have an opportunity later on when we recur to the section to present his amendment.

Mr. BACON. I will withhold it until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Census was, in section 8, page 6, line 13, before the word "name," to strike out "all persons engaged in agricultural pursuits;" in the same line, after the word "name," to insert "and color;" in line 14, after the word "farm," to strike out "color of occupant" and insert "and number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits;" and after the word "ranges," at the end of line 18, to strike out "and the acreage of crops as of the date of enumeration," so as to read:

The schedules relating to agriculture shall include name and color of occupant of each farm and number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, tenure, acreage of farm, value of farm and improvements, value of farm implements, number and value of live stock on farms and ranges, number and value of domestic animals not on farms and ranges, and the acreage of crops and the quantity and value of crops and other farm products for the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration.

Mr. LONG. On behalf of the committee, I desire to modify that amendment by withdrawing the proposed amendment in line 14, inserting the words "and number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits," and also withdrawing the amendment in line 19, striking out the words "and the acreage of crops as of the date of enumeration."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 6, line 13, before the word "name," it is proposed to strike out "all persons engaged in agricultural pursuits;" in the same line, after the word "name," to insert "and color;" and in line 14, after the word "farm," to strike out "color of occupant," so as to read:

The schedules relating to agriculture shall include name and color of occupant of each farm, tenure, acreage of farm, value of farm and improvements, value of farm implements, number and value of live stock on farms and ranges, number and value of domestic animals not on farms and ranges, and the acreage of crops as of the date of enumeration, and the acreage of crops and the quantity and value of crops and other farm products for the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Census was, in section 8, page 7, line 15, after the word "at," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand;" in line 19, after the word "neighborhood," to strike out the word "or;" and in the same line, after the word "household," to insert the words "and hand," so as to read:

The census of manufactures and of mines and quarries shall relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration of population, and shall be confined to mines and quarries and manufacturing establishments which were in active operation during all or a portion of that year and had a product valued at $1,000 or more. The census of manufactures shall furthermore be confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood household and hand industries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 7, after line 20, to insert:

The inquiry concerning manufactures shall cover the production of turpentine and rosin, and the report concerning this industry shall show, in addition to the other facts covered by the regular schedule of manufactures, the quantity of crude turpentine gathered, the quantity of turpentine and rosin manufactured, the sources, methods, and extent of the industry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 8, line 11, before the word "prior," to strike out "one year" and insert "six months," so as to read:

SEC. 9. That the Director of the Census shall, at least six months prior to the date fixed for commencing the enumeration at the Thirteenth and each succeeding decennial census, designate the number, whether one or more, of supervisors of census for each State and Territory, the District of Columbia, Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, and Porto Rico, and shall define the districts within which they are to act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. In section 9, page 8, after the word "act," I offer on behalf of the committee the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 8, line 17, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert a semicolon and the following words:

Except that the Director of the Census, in his discretion, need not designate supervisors for Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands, but in lieu thereof may employ special agents as hereinafter provided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Commitee on the Census was, on page 10, section 11, line 8, after the word "receive," to strike out:

A sum based upon the population of his district, in accordance with the following rates for each thousand or major fraction of a thousand: One dollar and fifty cents per thousand in each district having more than 750,000 inhabitants; $2 per thousand in each district having 500,000 to 750,000 inhabitants; $2.50 per thousand in each district having 400,000 to 500,000 inhabitants; $3 per thousand in each district having 300,000 to 400,000 inhabitants; $3.50 per thousand in each district having 200,000 to 300,000 inhabitants; and $4 per thousand in each district having less than 200,000 inhabitants. In addition to such compensation each supervisor shall receive the sum of $500, which sum, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, may be paid to any supervisor prior to the completion of his duties in one or more payments, as the Director of the Census may determine, such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him: Provided, That if the aggregate compensation of any supervisor as herein provided for amounts to less than $1,200 the Director of the Census shall pay such supervisor a sum sufficient to make his compensation amount to $1,200.

And insert:

The sum of $1,500 and, in addition thereto, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of population enumerated in his district, such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him: Provided, That of the above-named compensation a sum not to exceed $600, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, may be paid to any supervisor prior to the completion of his duties in one or more payments, as the Director of the Census may determine.

So as to read:

SEC. 11. That each supervisor of the census shall, upon the completion of his duties to the satisfaction of the Director of the Census, receive the sum of $1,500 and, in addition thereto, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of population enumerated in his district, such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him: Provided, That of the above-named compensation a sum not to exceed $600, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, may be paid to any supervisor prior to the completion of his duties in one or more payments, as the Director of the Census may determine.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what that provision means or what its object is.

Mr. LONG. The purpose of the amendment striking out the provision as it was in the bill and inserting the provision reported by the Senate committee is to give the Director of the Census a little more leeway or authority in determining the compensation of supervisors. It slightly increases the compensation of supervisors over the provision in the bill as it came from the House and over the compensation received at the last census; and it is the opinion of the director and of the committee that the compensation can be more accurately determined under this provision than under the provision as contained in the House bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Perhaps the Senator did not understand just the point on which I wanted information. As I understand the Senate committee amendment, it is to pay the supervisors $1,500 for their work, plus $1 for each thousand or majority fraction thereof enumerated in the district, and then the provision is that the Director of the Census may pay $600 of this salary before the work is completed.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to know why it is that the committee has put in that provision, making it possible in the first place that he may do this and limiting it to $600.

Mr. LONG. That is as to the partial payments which may be made. These payments include not only compensation for services, but also expenses; and the partial payment may be made, in the discretion of the director, so that the expenses of the supervisors may be paid at such time as he may deem proper during the progress of the work.

Mr. BURKETT. It is the idea of the proposed law then, to have the supervisor go ahead and finish his work before he receives any pay unless the director decides to pay him $600.

Mr. LONG. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the chairman if that has been customary in times past?

Mr. LONG. I am not advised as to that, but I think it has been.

Mr. BURKETT. The thought occurred to me that that might be rather an injustice to the supervisor. I recall that in the last census the supervisor's work hung on for a good while. Long after the work had been practically finished he could not close up; and to hold out his salary is rather an injustice to him. It may be a year——

Mr. LONG. If he closes his work, he is entitled to his salary. This provides for a partial payment in advance of the completion of his work.

Mr. BURKETT. I remember that the supervisors' term of work was a good deal longer than that of the enumerators.

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The point I am trying to get at is that it seems to work an injustice to keep him out of his salary until he is all through. It may take him a year. It did before, if I remember correctly.

Mr. LONG. The purpose of this amendment is to permit the director to make partial payments in advance of the completion of the work.

Mr. BURKETT. Not to exceed $600.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Census was, on page 11, section 11, after the word "provided," in line 17, to strike out "further."

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 11.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee, who has the bill in charge, whether there is any provision by which the Director of the Census may compensate enumerators who have to travel long distances at a good deal of expense, and get only a few names. In the western country, in Colorado and some of the other States in the West, there are isolated communities where it will be necessary for the enumerators to go, and this compensation does not seem to me to be such as to justify them in going there. Having that in view, I should like to have put in the bill something by which the director may on such occasions give a proper compensation. I think it is very important that we should get all that information in the western country; and the pay will be practically nothing. The expense attendant upon making the enumeration will be four or five or ten times as much as the enumerator would get. I have looked over the bill only casually, and I have not seen anything that quite covers it.

Mr. LONG. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, I wish to call his attention to the provision of the bill found on page 15, line 18. We have not yet reached it in the consideration of the bill. It begins in line 18, where authority is given "in other subdivisions," using the language of the bill, for the director to pay a per diem rate to the enumerator. That will cover cases such as the Senator refers to.

Mr. TELLER. I have not given particular attention to the bill except as to one provision about which I consulted the chairman. I do not know but that the clause referred to will do it, although it is not a very high rate of pay—$2 a day, where a common laborer gets $3. But I shall not make any point upon it.

Mr. LONG. It says that it shall not be less than $3 nor more than $6 per day, as the Senator will observe.

Mr. TELLER. Where is that?

Mr. LONG. In line 24, page 15.

Mr. TELLER. I had not noticed that provision.

Mr. LONG. I think it covers exactly what the Senator desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Census was, in section 13, on page 13, line 23, after "enumerator," to strike out:

But the district or districts assigned to any enumerator shall not include more than 2,000 inhabitants, according to estimates based on the preceding census or other reliable information.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That the territory assigned to each supervisor shall be divided into as many enumeration districts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, two or more enumeration districts may be given to one enumerator, and the boundaries of all the enumeration districts shall be clearly described by civil divisions, rivers, roads, public surveys, or other easily distinguishable lines: Provided, That enumerators may be assigned for the special enumeration of institutions, when desirable, without reference to the number of inmates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 15, line 12, after the word "industry," to insert:

reported. In other subdivisions the Director of the Census may fix a mixed rate of not less than one nor more than two dollars per day and, in addition, an allowance of not less than 1 nor more than 3 cents for each inhabitant enumerated, and not less than 15 nor more than 20 cents for each farm and each establishment of productive industry reported.

So as to read:

SEC. 16. That the compensation of enumerators shall be determined by the Director of the Census as follows: In subdivisions where he shall deem such remuneration sufficient, an allowance of not less than 2 nor more than 4 cents for each inhabitant; not less than 20 nor more than 30 cents for each farm reported; 10 cents for each barn and inclosure containing live stock not on farms, and not less than 20 nor more than 30 cents for each establishment of productive industry reported. In other subdivisions the Director of the Census may fix a mixed rate of not less than one nor more than two dollars per day and, in addition, an allowance of not less than 1 nor more than 3 cents for each inhabitant enumerated, and not less than 15 nor more than 20 cents for each farm and each establishment of productive industry reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, on page 18, line 13, after the word "made," to insert "except those relating to paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, and inmates of benevolent institutions," so as to read:

SEC. 20. That the enumeration of the population required by section 1 of this act shall be taken as of the 15th day of April; and it shall be the duty of each enumerator to commence the enumeration of his district on that day, unless the Director of the Census in his discretion shall defer the enumeration in said district by reason of climatic or other conditions which would materially interfere with the proper conduct of the work; but in any event it shall be the duty of each enumerator to prepare the returns hereinbefore required to be made, except those relating to paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, and inmates of benevolent institutions, and to forward the same to the supervisor of his district within thirty days from the commencement of the enumeration of his district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, on page 20, line 1, after the word "make," to insert "a false test schedule," so as to read:

Or if he shall willfully and knowingly swear to or affirm falsely, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding five years and be fined not exceeding $2,000; or if he shall willfully and knowingly make a false test schedule, a false certificate, or a fictitious return, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, on page 21, line 14, after the words "permit of," to insert "the collection of statistics for census purposes, including," so as to read:

And it shall be the duty of every owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, or agent of a hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building, when requested by the Director of the Census, or by any supervisor, enumerator, special agent, or other employee of the Census Office, acting under the instructions of the said director, to furnish the names of the occupants of said hotel, apartment house, boarding or lodging house, tenement, or other building, and to give thereto free ingress and egress to any duly accredited representative of the Census Office, so as to permit of the collection of statistics for census purposes, including the proper and correct enumeration of all persons having their usual place of abode in said hotel, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 27, on page 23, line 19, after the words "the purchase of," to insert "manuscripts," so as to read:

SEC. 27. That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office, including * * * the purchase of manuscripts, books of reference and periodicals, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Census was, in section 28, page 24, after line 17, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the Director of the Census the Public Printer does not produce the printing and binding required under the provisions of this act with sufficient promptness, or whenever said printing and binding are not produced by the Public Printer in a manner satisfactory to the Director of the Census in quality or price, said Director is hereby authorized to contract with private parties for printing and binding, after due competition.

Mr. LONG. At the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I desire to modify the proposed amendment. In line 24, after the word "authorize," I move to insert "with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

Mr. HOPKINS. Before that is adopted, I should like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want to interpose an objection to anyone trying to perfect the amendment; I have not any objection to the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment; but before the entire amendment is adopted I think we had better stop and consider the matter. I thought, perhaps, it would be better to lay it aside, if the Senator wished, until we got through with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the proviso go over unless the Senator from Kansas can explain the purpose of it and show why it should be inserted in the bill.

Mr. LONG. How long does the Senator desire to have the amendment go over? To what time?

Mr. PENROSE. Until the Senate has had some opportunity to consider it. I merely want to consult the convenience of the Senator from Kansas as to whether it shall go over now and be discussed later.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over until the end of the bill is reached. Of course it is desirable to get the bill through to-day, if possible.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. LONG. Has the amendment I suggested to the amendment been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it had better go over with the proviso.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over and the amendment proposed to the amendment will be pending when its consideration is resumed.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, in section 32, page 26, line 7, before the word "returns," to insert "or agricultural," so as to read:

That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized, at his discretion, upon the written request of the governor of any State or Territory, or of a court of record, to furnish such governor or court of record with certified copies of so much of the population or agricultural returns as may be requested, upon the payment of the actual cost of making such copies, and $1 additional for certification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 18, page 26.

Mr. CLAY. I want to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to section 33.

Mr. LONG. It has not yet been read.

Mr. CLAY. I will read it, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. LONG. It has not yet been read by the Secretary. It has just been reached.

Mr. CLAY. I thought the Secretary was proceeding to read it.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that it should be first read at the desk.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 33. That the Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the use of the Census Office, and for other governmental purposes, the site and buildings thereon, containing about 118,000 square feet of ground, and constituting the southern 350 feet, more or less, of square No. 574, in Washington, D. C., bounded on the north by a public alley, on the south by B street, on the east by First street, and on the west by Second street NW.: Provided, That not more than $430,000 shall be paid for the property herein referred to.

That the said Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, is instructed to cause to be erected on such portion of the site as is not now occupied by buildings a commodious and substantial building with fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use of the Census Office, and for other governmental purposes, the cost of such building not to exceed $250,000. A sum of money sufficient to pay for the property and the erection of the said building is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no part of the said appropriation shall be expended until a valid title to the property referred to shall be vested in the United States.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that the amendment contemplates purchasing the present site where the present building is located. I understand that it now belongs to private parties. It also contemplates erecting a building there to be permanently used for the purpose of the census work, which will cost $250,000.

I will ask the Senator from Kansas if he thinks that the present location is a suitable one for a permanent census building. It is not in a healthy location, I am sure; it is down in a basin; and, in my judgment, it is a very poor place to be selected for the purpose.

I doubt very materially if we could erect a building for $250,000 that would be suitable for the permanent census work. If we are going to buy ground for the purpose of locating a building for the census work we ought to select a suitable healthy location. A great many of the persons engaged in that work are ladies. In the summer time it is almost impossible for the occupants to stay in the present census building with any degree of comfort. In my judgment it is a poor selection, it is an improper place, and a much more suitable place could be selected.

This matter seems not to have been considered by the House. It is a Senate amendment. Of course, the Senator in charge of the bill may have reasons to urge why it ought to be adopted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Georgia, I will state that the committee investigated the objections to the proposed purchase which are presented by the Senator. The Census Office has been in that building for almost ten years. The last census was taken while the Census Office occupied that building. No serious objection was made to it on the ground that it was an unhealthy or undesirable location. There are doubtless other locations in the city that are much more desirable, but the price would be very much higher than that provided in the amendment.

The considerations which impelled the committee to report this amendment were that the Census Office has occupied for about ten years the building that was used in the last census, and that can be used in the next census. There is another building obtained in this purchase and there is room in addition to construct a third building.

During the taking of the last census and the years since that census was taken, the Government has paid out in rent for the Census Office the sum of $262,000, or it will have paid out that amount by the end of the present fiscal year. The rentals for the next ten years for that building and other buildings that will be necessary to take care of the force required will amount to at least $270,000. Under an option that has been obtained on the ground on which the Census Office is located and on the property adjoining, which is described in the amendment, the whole can be bought for $354,126.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. In connection with the amount of rent to be paid, I suggest to the Senator it was made manifest, I think, that the additional cost incident to a division of the force in a variety of buildings over the city would, through extra employment and expense incident to such a division, involve an outlay of money like $50,000 more than the same service would cost if concentrated under one roof.

Further still, we would have to take into account the great delay caused by the transportation from one part of the city to another of material under consideration in the preparation of the reports. The director made it clear, I think, to the committee that the census work could not be divided as other departments of the Government have bureaus divided. Take, for instance, the Indian Office, a part of the Department of the Interior. It may, without serious detriment to the service, be located remote from the Secretary's office.

Mr. LONG. Or from the Land Office.

Mr. CARTER. Or from the Land Office, because the business is complete in a sense within itself. But in dealing with the schedules of population it is necessary actually to subdivide divsions, and when divisions are subdivided and housed in different parts of the city very great inconvenience, much delay, and considerable additional expense are involved.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Montana for calling the attention of the Senate to this additional reason why the amendment reported by the committee should be adopted. The figures that I gave as to rentals for buildings for taking the next census did not include the additional cost to which the Senator refers.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Did I understand the Senator to say that the present Director of the Census is in favor of the purchase of this property and the permanent location of the Census building at that point?

Mr. LONG. He is.

Mr. HALE. Very decidedly.

Mr. CLAY. Then the present director surely does not entertain the same views that the former director entertained in regard to this building. I have positive knowledge that the most serious complaint was made by the former director in regard to the inconvenience of the building and the great trouble they had in taking care of the employees during the hot summer months. In the first place, I do not believe the building is properly constructed for that number of employees to work in. It is low, and it is in a low, flat place.

I have no objection to the purchase of ground and building a permanent place for the census work. I believe the Government ought to own its buildings. I agree with the Senator that we ought not to continue to pay this enormous amount of rent. But if we are going to spend nearly a million dollars for the purpose of getting ground for a building——

Mr. LONG. The Senator is mistaken as to the amount.

Mr. CLAY. It is six hundred and some odd thousand dollars.

Mr. LONG. It is $674,000, including the cost of a new building six stories in height, to be erected on ground northwest of the present building.

Mr. CLAY. The ground, I understand, is to cost $430,000 and the building $250,000. Does the Senator say that the committee intends that the present building shall simply be enlarged? Is it proposed to add to it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. LONG. It is not the intention, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, to enlarge the present building. It is the intention to occupy the present building during the next census, as it was occupied during the last census, and also to erect another building, a modern and more permanent building, six stories in height, costing $250,000, on the space not occupied by the present Census building or by what is known as the "high school building," which is also included in this purchase and which will be occupied also. This will make three buildings on the ground purchased. In the opinion of the Director of the Census and the committee this will afford sufficient space for all the employees of the bureau and will not necessitate the rental of any additional buildings during the next census period.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Government has an option on this property now for $425,000 or $435,000?

Mr. LONG. The Director of the Census has such option.

Mr. CLAY. The Director of the Census has secured an option from the private owners for $435,000. Did the committee consider any other location except this one?

Mr. LONG. After hearing the Director of the Census, the committee was of the opinion that this was a desirable place to locate the Census Bureau, and while we take into consideration other locations we deemed this a good location for the office.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. It occurred to me all the way through that the estimate we have of $250,000 for the building is much lower than any building the Government has erected in, say, the last ten years, to say the least. I should like to inquire somewhat as to the committee's investigation of the cost of this property, and what it is going to contemplate.

Mr. LONG. The building will be a fireproof building. It will not be so elaborate a building as the Senator would like to see erected or that might be erected in other parts of the city if the location were elsewhere; but it will be a substantial building, answering the requirements of the Census Office in the opinion of the director. The estimate as to the cost was made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who has made the preliminary plans that were followed by the Director of the Census in presenting the matter to the committee.

Mr. BURKETT. It occurs to me that $250,000 would construct a pretty good building, but comparing it proportionately with what other buildings cost, does the Senator think it is advisable to locate at this particular place a government building proportionately as insignificant as that would be to other buildings that we know the price of?

Mr. LONG. I do; and that is the opinion of the committee.

Mr. BURKETT. Did the committee take into consideration anything of the proposition that has been pending before Congress for a good many years, to get our public buildings in a line along the south side of the Avenue?

Mr. LONG. The committee did not consider the purchase of ground and the erection of a building on the south side of the Avenue, for we knew that it would not be possible to do that, either within the amount suggested in the amendment or within the time that it will be necessary to have the building ready for the next census. From information that we have obtained we believed the building provided for in this amendment could be erected in time for the beginning of the next census.

Mr. BURKETT. How many square feet does this contemplate?

Mr. LONG. The floor space in the present building amounts to 95,000 square feet, the proposed new building would approximately have 70,000, and the high school building has 35,000, making an aggregate of 200,000 square feet in the buildings.

Mr. BURKETT. How does that compare in size with the tract that was purchased for the new municipal building?

Mr. LONG. I think it is much larger.

Mr. BURKETT. Did the committee make any investigation as to what property can be acquired along the Avenue, or anywhere else, as a matter of fact, besides this property?

Mr. LONG. As the Senator knows, property south of the Avenue in the locality of the District building could not be purchased within the limit fixed in the amendment. Property in that locality would be much more expensive than this property. The committee did take into consideration the fact that this is at a price of about $3.31 per square foot and that the last sale of property in the immediate locality, directly opposite, called the Ventosa Apartment House, was sold, without any building, at $3.50 per square foot.

Mr. HALE. I think, if the Senator will allow me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Nebraska has struck exactly at the reason that actuated the committee in reporting this amendment. It is one of the rare opportunities that has been afforded of getting large accommodations and safe quarters at a reasonable price, at something like the amount which private citizens would expend for large buildings. The topography lends itself to all that.

The committee did consider, without going into prices of other lots, what it might do for the Census Office. It might abandon this property. It might buy property that is at a higher altitude, submit it to architects, and have a building erected, but that would cost, before we got through with it, anywhere from two and a half to four million dollars. The committee did think, as this good trade offers, that we can get out of it good buildings and ample accommodations for this comparatively small sum. We are already renting enormous buildings at an enormous cost. The committee did not think that we ought to lose this opportunity; and that is my view.

I have had a good deal of experience with the census work heretofore. I was chairman of the committee for a long time. So far as the healthfulness of the place goes, it is just as healthful as any land on the south side of the Avenue until you get up about Twelfth or Thirteenth streets. Yet in the end the Government will have all of that property and will have great buildings erected in a symmetrical way that will cost tens of millions of dollars.

This land is not in any degree a swamp. It has been well drained. There is no malaria there any more than anywhere on the Potomac River. It is low, but not unduly low. A great deal of property in the city is as low as this. Experience does not show that it is a lurking place for fever or malaria, or that it would be dangerous to the occupants of the buildings. With all these advantages the very things the Senator from Nebraska has referred to were the things that I think actuated the committee in making up its judgment.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator remember the price per square foot that we paid when we built the municipal building?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not, but it is much greater. Then, unfortunately, as everybody knows, when the Government gets its eye upon any property prices at the hands of owners begin to advance. Every year the prices of property on the lower side of the Avenue increase, and the money that the Government in the end will pay will be treble what it would have been if we had taken up the large scheme which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] at one time proposed and which contemplated the whole tract between the Avenue and the Mall. I can not tell the difference, but it is very great.

Then the Senator knows that when we have to erect a building south of the Avenue we should not construct such a building as this. We can put up for $250,000 a building on this 330,000 square feet of land that for practical purposes and for every use of government clerks and employees will be just as good as if it cost a million and a half. It is the kind of building that a private citizen would build.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the chairman what is the present rent of the building?

Mr. LONG. The present rent is $21,000 annually.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is there any difficulty about securing an extension of the lease?

Mr. LONG. I think there would be considerable difficulty. I do not know definitely about it, but the building will accommodate only part of the clerks required for the next census. It will be necessary for the Government to go outside of that building, as it did in the last census, in order to accommodate the force necessary for taking the next census.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that the purchase contemplated covers ground other than that covered by the present building.

Mr. LONG. It does.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How much?

Mr. LONG. It contemplates the purchase of the building immediately north, known as the "high school building," and the purchase of ground sufficient in area on which to construct a new building 6 stories in height, costing not to exceed $250,000. It will give the Census Office three buildings instead of one, and sufficient space to care for all the clerks engaged in the work of the next census.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And it would, I imagine, leave in existence the present building as it stands.

Mr. LONG. It would.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I presume that my inquiries cover matters that have already been presented to the Senate. I simply chanced a moment ago to observe that this subject was under discussion. But I have always wondered that that location should have been chosen for the Census Office. It is about as low as any ground in the city; it is entirely surrounded by buildings of rather an inferior character, and yet so surrounded as to cut the building off from sufficient light and sufficient view, it seems to me. I believe that every public building should have a large air space about it, and it seems to me that, unless there is immediate necessity for the purchase of this property, it would be very much better to give the proper official the power to purchase property according to his discretion, or that of some commission, limiting the amount to be paid for the land and the amount to be paid for the building. I will ask the Senator about how many cubic feet is it contemplated that these additional buildings should contain.

Mr. LONG. I have stated before the floor space that would be included in the three buildings. The floor space in the present building is 95,000 feet; in the proposed new building it will be approximately 70,000 feet; and in the "high school building," so-called, there are 35,000 feet, or an aggregate of 200,000 square feet in the three buildings.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, 200,000 square feet of floor space can be constructed of fireproof material for about $5 a square foot, or about 50 cents a cubic foot. So if the Senator proposes to have a building that will have 200,000 square feet of floor space, the cost could be brought within $1,000,000.

I imagine that a site very much healthier and very much better than this—higher, with more air about it, with a more extensive view about it—could be purchased for the sum which is named in this bill, I believe of $450,000. I imagine that a very good location could be got for from $2 to $3 a square foot some place adjoining the Mall, where there will be a beautiful park.

Mr. LONG. Would the Senator suggest the space adjoining or near the Mall that could be purchased for that price?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I know that the George Washington University bought land adjoining the Mall—a very considerable area of land, more than I think is contemplated here—for less than $250,000.

But why prescribe in this bill the location of the Census Office? Why should we not leave it to the judgment of a competent board or department or commission, and limit the amount of the appropriation for the lot, limit the amount of the appropriation for the building, and then give such a commission some leeway in the determination of the location and the character of the building? I do not think that a more unfavorable place could be secured in the District of Columbia for a large public building intended for the comfort and convenience of a large number of employees than the location of the present Census Office, and I do not believe that any very largely increased expenditure would be caused by reason of the course which I suggest. So far as I am concerned, I certainly should never join in any movement to put a permanent building in so inferior a location. I think it would be cruel to subject the census clerks and employees to location in such a place as that.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not press this section. This matter was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at the last session of Congress and was unanimously turned down by that committee, for the reason that in a bill which was passed we provided for two million and a half dollars to buy certain blocks of land south of Pennsylvania avenue and facing the park or the circle, or whatever it may be called, south of the White House. At this time appraisers are going over those three blocks of land and it is in process of being purchased. If we succeed in getting these three blocks, it is the object and desire of the committees of both the House and the Senate, on the recommendation of members of the Cabinet, of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to erect thereon a sufficient number of buildings to care for and house all of these departments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from West Virginia state when those buildings will probably be completed?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Kansas can look perhaps as far into the future as I can. I am not a clairvoyant or a fortune teller; but, Mr. President, can this ground be bought and the buildings erected in time to do the present Director of the Census any good in the taking of the present census?

Mr. LONG. In answer to the inquiry, I will say to the Senator that it can. If we thought this building could not be erected within the time necessary, we would not have reported this amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I do not want to question the judgment of the Senator from Kansas or that of the committee, but judging from my experience of the way things move in the city of Washington when you have to condemn land and buy it and erect buildings thereon, probably we shall have reached the taking of the census of 1920 before this building will be in condition to be used.

Mr. President, the buildings which we have down here, with the buildings that are rented, were sufficient for the taking of the last census; and, in my judgment, there is no need of pressing this building clause in the pending bill at the present time, and especially in view of the fact which I stated a few moments ago, that this matter was before the appropriate and proper committee, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by whom it was unanimously rejected, and because of the fact before stated, that we propose to erect buildings which will house all of these departments. If buildings we already possessed had not been torn down, perhaps we would not have needed this building; we could have housed therein a part of the clerks in buildings that have been, in my judgment, unnecessarily torn down.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question before he takes his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the land the Senator refers to is that which it is proposed to purchase under the appropriation of last year?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That is, the blocks next to Fifteenth street?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; the three blocks between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets.

Mr. LODGE. Opposite the New Willard Hotel?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; the three blocks between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets.

Mr. LODGE. If that purchase is consummated, will there be room there for the Census building as well as for the other three departments to which the Senator refers?

Mr. SCOTT. We were so informed by the proper authority—the Supervising Architect.

Mr. LODGE. How soon does the Senator think it likely that the purchase of the land will be completed?

Mr. SCOTT. That, as I suggested to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] a few moments ago, I can not possibly state.

Mr. LODGE. Not the construction of the buildings, but the purchase of the land?

Mr. SCOTT. They are now engaged in the proceeding prior to taking action to condemn the land.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course I think we all must agree that it is extremely desirable to put all the census force under one roof, and that we no doubt are paying high rent now. I have listened to the debate. I was at first impressed very favorably with the views of the committee, but I begin to question very much whether it will be good economy in the long run to put a building or to put three buildings—to a certain extent a makeshift—in a situation which is acknowledged to be a poor one. If we are going to purchase under the appropriation of last year the large tract to which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] has referred—and sooner or later I suppose, we may assume that that will be done——

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will allow me, we contemplate asking to have the ends of the street abandoned, which will virtually give us almost another block if we get those provided for.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and if there is room there to put a Census building on land which we are going to buy in any event, it seems to me it is poor economy to establish ourselves permanently in an inferior situation. It would be better in the end to construct a Census building, even such a building as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] describes, in a good situation. I can see that it will cost us more to continue with rented buildings, of course, but it will cost us a great deal more to put up at the place proposed and connect three buildings which we shall assuredly give up before very long. If the building goes on the land described by the Senator from West Virginia, we save the cost of the land to begin with, because we are going to buy all that land in any event. We have three great departments to place there, and if there is room there for the Census building, all the money that is appropriated here for a building and ground could be put into a good building for the Census and in a proper situation. I think it would save the Government money in the long run and give us a permanent building.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we must not forget that we are confronted here with a condition. We must have a building, and that building must be completed for the next census. There is no question but that we can erect a building in conformity with the views of the park commission, or whatever it is called, and in the proper place. We can probably do that for between four and six million dollars.

Mr. LONG. And within four or six years.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; within four or six years. Do we want to spend in the first instance for this particular purpose this year, even if we could complete the building, the sum of from four to six million dollars? With the present condition of the Treasury, can we afford to do it and meet the other obligations of the Government without issuing bonds?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. He speaks of "a building costing four or five million dollars." That is mere conjecture. If the object is to put up a building of moderate cost, we can construct such a building for the same price that is proposed in this bill. My proposition is simply to build it in another place; that is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we would not construct such a building as is contemplated in this bill as part of the scheme for permanent buildings of the Government. The Senator from Massachusetts would not vote to put up such a building—a $250,000 building—to be torn down in a short time and be rebuilt. As I understand, we all agree upon one proposition, and that is that all the new buildings in this contemplated scheme are to be of like character, that they are to be so designed as to beautify and be a credit to the city for a hundred years to come, and then we will not need to tear them down.

If we are ready to go on to-day with that scheme and carry it out, and if we can get the building for the Census Bureau in time and the money to pay for it without crippling the Government in other respects, I certainly would be in favor of it, and I so expressed myself in the committee. But the general consensus of opinion was that we would hardly be justified in asking for the necessary amount to construct a monumental building, nor could we get that building finished within the proper period for the work of the next census.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the urgent necessity for an additional and larger building for the Census Bureau when we have the same building that was occupied for this purpose eight years ago, when there was sufficient room?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we did not have sufficient room.

Mr. SCOTT. We got along with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. We had one or two buildings in addition to that. We rented a building on G street for a year or two, and we shall have to rent again at some other place.

Mr. SCOTT. Can we not do that again?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think we can get an appropriate building in the proper location by next year for anything like a reasonable sum. I do not know that it would be possible to get the right character of building. It has already been shown that the expense of conducting this bureau in buildings scattered over the city is quite enormous, as well as inconvenient, and that it delays the work to a great extent.

So we finally get down to the next proposition, which is really the only one, as to whether or not we can carry out the scheme which the Senator from West Virginia has of putting up our new buildings south of the Avenue. If we can do that, if we have got the money to do it and a buildings for the census can be constructed in time, I do not think there would be a single vote against it, but I believe that it can not possibly be done, and that is the general understanding.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the opposition to this scheme of securing the piece of ground situated below Capitol Hill and constructing a Census building on it. It seems to me that that piece of ground is better than any in all that part of the city south of the Avenue. There has been an effort in recent years to erect all our public buildings in a string on the south side of the Avenue. Those who have examined that ground know that it was all a quagmire and a swamp and that the course of the old Tiber Creek was through it. The ground included in the three blocks that we are seeking to secure is a part of that swampy ground. Now, what surprises me is that the gentlemen who are in favor of locating all our public buildings on the swampy side of the city, where it costs so much to get a foundation, should object to this piece of ground, which is a little swampier than all the rest. I think the building provided for in the bill will answer all the purposes that any other building would.

It took about one-third of the appropriation for the Post-Office building to get a proper foundation. They had to put in piling without end; and I have heard indirectly that the contractor who put up the new District building congratulated himself on the fact that the building did not sink before he got through with it.

The three blocks south of the Avenue which were provided for last year take in a part of the ragged end of the city. The lower portion of that tract extends down where the outlet of the old Tiber Creek was, and I presume before we get through with it it will be the most expensive piece of ground in the entire city. When the Government has to resort to condemnation proceedings, the real-estate agents swear for one another and inflate prices. I think I read somewhere that they were claiming the land down south of the Avenue was worth from $7 to $10 a square foot. I venture to say that they could not palm it off on anybody else for the price at which they are seeking to unload it on the Government.

Take the piece of ground where the District building is. One of the street railway companies owned that ground. They had a power house on it, which was destroyed by fire, and that ground was nothing but a piece of ruin, a bog. Nobody wanted it, and nobody cared about it; yet they unloaded it on the Government and erected that fine District building in that quagmire when we had good ground up here where the old District building formerly stood.

Mr. President, I only rose to express my surprise that Senators who are in favor of erecting all our public buildings in low, swampy ground should object to this piece of ground proposed for the Census building, which is a little swampier than all the rest.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say in regard to the three blocks south of the Avenue which it is proposed to purchase, that I think that land runs off at one end into low ground; but most of it is on natural ground, where the hill rises.

Mr. NELSON. A little bit of it, near the Treasury Department, is high ground.

Mr. LODGE. I think it differs from the rest.

Mr. NELSON. But over half of that ground is very swampy and boggy, and we shall find that it will cost us four or five million dollars before we secure that ground.

The site of the Post-Office Department, as I understand, cost us over $600,000. Yet the building is constructed in a bog, and when there is high water in the Potomac and the water backs up it gets into the basement of that building. It seems, however, to be the plan and the scheme to erect our public buildings like a row of Lombardy poplars on the south side of the Avenue. If that is the scheme that is to be followed, I do not see, if we are going to select swampy ground for all our buildings, why we should not take this site below Capitol Hill, which I think is pretty near the old course of Tiber Creek.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to think for a moment that I have ever been in harmony with the view of placing all our buildings south of the Avenue; but I do not see that we can stem the inclination to place them all there any more than we could stop a glacier from sliding down hill. The buildings seem to go there, and the majority of Senators seem to think they must follow that scheme. We are placing our public buildings not only in the worst part of the city, so far as healthfulness is concerned, and in the hottest part of the city, but we are placing all of our buildings over to one side of the city paralleling the river, instead of along some great avenue going through the city.
